

Ellie Brooks Pecoraro

1 Std.

Hi! I'm hoping I'm able to give some guidance or someone has also been through this.

Almost a year ago we potty trained my 3yo (26mo) at the time. Within 6 weeks we were taking ourselves to the potty minus some poop accidents. This took a little bit longer but we DID get it. We were fully potty trained. In January we let him know I was pregnant. Almost immediately he stopped all pooping on potty & began exclusively pooping his pants. He has now also started peeing his pants. He will still pee on the potty as well. He lets us know he needs to go & takes himself. He is not scared of the potty but will get upset when we ask him to sit & try to poop. He is not constipated. Rather regular, pooping 1-2x a day however he isn't consistent with the time. We have tried everything from being calm & gently redirecting to firmly making it known it is not okay & applying consequences. I am a total loss, would love feedback. We have to get this resolved before baby 3 arrives.

Caroline McLuckie

10 Std.

Stage 2 Communication

Hi all. I'm new to the group but have been working with the OCPT Method since end of January with my now 2.5 year old.

Stage 1 was a quick successful for us. He will happily take himself to the toilet for wee wee and poop when he's naked in the house.

The challenge has been when he is wearing clothes - I'm trying commando. He doesn't go or tell me he needs to go. To add to that, daycare has been an issue (so much so that I lodged a formal complaint). The toilet there isn't readily accessible so he will need to tell someone when he needs to go. The educators also get to a point in the day where they put a pull up on him over his undies (i don't like it). This was after them being really hesitant, putting pullups on any chance they got, and 1 educator telling me he wasn't ready (hence the complaint).

So my question/ advice needed: how can I help him communicate when he needs to go when he's wearing pants, before he does??

Madison Poudrier

the skill of self initiating can take a while for some kids, it's typically the last block. he may need prompting while in the pants to learn some more. if he's holding it for a while, i'd say to prompt before transitions (leaving the house, before meals, before nap, any big transition for daycare). if he has more than 2 accidents in pants, switch back to block 1 so he learns that pants need to stay dry. also, how successful is he at pulling them up and down himself?

daycare is our biggest issue too. we are still in diapers at daycare with occasional prompting. i'd love more consistent bathroom trips to help her be successful at school, however it hasn't derailed at home. so keep that in mind if the daycare issue persists, he can absolutely be successful in blocks 2 and beyond at home and in public.

5 Std.

Antworten

Victoria Hardaway

12 Std.

Nighttime and ADHD

edit to add: I'm looking for information from informed caregivers who have dealt with ADHD personally. Not random opinions.

My 40 month old boy is increasingly presenting with ADHD. He has been fully potty trained for a year and a half, but not night trained. We tried waking him up to go about 8 months ago and he just screamed and we were all miserable, so we gave up. Now he's older, occasionally wakes up dry overnight, but not usually, and we'd like to try again.

He's shown some signs that he can wake up to pee and that he knows when he's gone on himself. So, I think he can do this.

What has your experience been with nighttime and ADHD? Does the ditch the diapers, limit fluids, and wake regularly trifecta work? What else do I need to know?

MY MAIN QUESTION:

Do you think it would be better to wake him at the same time every night? Or the same interval from when he went down for sleep?

Amber Fortney Foote

Night wetting had nothing to do with ADHD. Night wetting is developmental. Waking your child is not helping them. The brain needs to learn to wake it's self up. It is considered normal to have night wetting until about 11 years old especially boys.

2 Std.

Antworten

Nick Tricarico

13 Std.

Potty struggles:

Hello all! I have a 35 month old boy. We started when he was roughly 27 months. Did the 3 day naked weekend and went great. The problem lies afterwards..daycare. I get they have other kids to care for and watch and undivided attention is nonexistent. The confusion and inconsistency I think is where our problem lies. I've talked with them about trying to work with me, but they require a pull up against their skin unless full potty trained, even when they are trying to train them. It's befuddling to say the least.

We plan to pull him in the coming weeks as we just had our second and my wife will transition to SAHM.

Our son will go when prompted, sometimes with a fight because he doesn't want to stop playing. He has not consistently told us he needs to use the potty, except as a delay tactic at nap time/bedtime. He has done well in outings and has told me he needs to potty and stays dry when we are out, but it's a timing thing with him at home, pottyng him at intervals.

He poops on the potty no problem, pees and at times doesn't fully empty his bladder, especially after dinner going multiple times in an hour.

All this to say, how should we proceed when we transition him out of daycare. Reset followed by commando ? Feeling frustrated and let down. There is not necessarily a time constraint other than it would be nice to get him mostly there for when I go back to work (mid June). He definitely knows what we want, but there is a block of him verbalizing and self initiating.

Any and all suggestions are helpful!

Melanie Cody

14 Std.

.

Block 2 day 8 with a 31 month daughter

Has only had 2 pee accidents since starting potty training. Has had zero successful poops. Usually ends up going in her pull-up during the night. Doesn't seem to be holding her poop as she usually pooped in the morning first thing prior to potty training as well so this seems in line with her normal cadence. We are prompting her for potty and poop. Any suggestions on how to move forward with poop in the potty?

Laurynn LeAnn Howard

14 Std.

.

Has anyone done a reset at age 3?

For context, we have been working on potty training since SEPTEMBER of last year when she was 2.5. She turns 3 this month. She took to potty training extremely well for the first week or so, she's very smart.. and then we went on a family beach trip & it unraveled everything. Since then, we have been rebuilding. She has gotten to the point over the past several months where she will go when prompted. However the catch is she REFUSES to go on her own, and she has not self initiated once since the family trip last September. It is taking such a toll on me mentally. If I don't remember to set her on the toilet, she will just pee in her underwear and not even tell me it happened. She will walk around with wet pants until I notice. It's like she doesn't care AT ALL. If I miscalculate at ALL there's an accident. Not to mention she has not pooped on the potty in at least 4 months. We got a couple out of her in the beginning & now she only goes in her bed time pull up. She also has asked me to just put her back in diapers multiple times and I'm so tempted to at this point. I'm just honestly at a loss. I have done everything the book says to do. I dedicated so much time & energy and she's just not having it. I should also mention she's a very spirited child & everything with her is a power struggle so maybe this is what it boils down to?

I'm looking for any and all advice. We just cannot continue like we have been. I'm getting beyond frustrated every time she has an accident for the past couple weeks so I know something has to change. I'm just terrified of doing a reset at this age. I should have after the beach trip but I was stubborn.

Mary Yang Fu

I realize this may seem counter to what you're thinking but what if you enlist help and go all in and night train? That way you take away the comfort of any diaper and teach her that the potty is the right place to go. I do think you need and deserve a reset for yourself though. Kids can feel our energy. Can you get anyone to help you??

14 Std.

Antworten

Margrethe Stokka-Aas

18 Std.

Almost 3.5 year old boy suddenly wetting himself during g the night.

Potty training started in april last year, at 30 mo this. Has been self-initiating these last few months. Have been seeing more accidents during the day and now also every night for the past week or so.

Nighttime trained at the same time as day trining, used to be dry overnight with 1 sleep per when we go to bed. Nothings changed at home/at day care...

Any idea what's going on? Experienced the same?

Mafe Vill

20 Std.

.

Confused on block one

I am confused as to when we are able to move to block 2. We started this Friday. 1st day he was able to pee and poop by chance on the potty and many pee "accidents". He drank a lot of water though. Day 2 he had so many accidents but was able to poop after nap time while hugging. We are now on day 3 and idk if it's ok to move on to block 2 now. He hasn't self initiated. We have prompted and sometimes catch in mid stream but never finishes in the potty. So do we move on or not?

Kendra Bain

You can move on since he has peed and pooped on the potty. Self-initiation is an advanced skill and the book says not to expect it until about 3 weeks into potty training

19 Std.

Antworten

Amy Louise Gidman

20 Std.

.

My boy (4 in May) has been day time potty trained since Jan 2024 - we did leave it longer than we wanted due to him having surgery booked for this date. He took to it super fast and was trained within 5 days with only a handful of accidents when nursery took over. Phew!

We did continue with night time pull up nappies. I couldn't bear the thought of waking him in the night as he's a terrible sleeper and is awake for over an hour each time he wakes.

However, I think we're ready to ditch them now! He had four wet nappies in December, one at the beginning of Jan, one at the end of February and nothing since then. He wakes in the night if he needs the toilet.

So for night time, what's the best plan? Commando with pjs or pants? I've tried finding the answer in my book and might be missing it but can't see anything about it so thought I'd ask here 😊

Lauren Nicole Isabella

Once my boy started waking dry I just removed the pull ups and put him to bed in his pjs. He's never wet the bed

19 Std.

Antworten

Kate Gresswell

1 Tag

This is my second time using this method, it worked perfectly with my eldest. But my 25 month old seems to be a completely different story - withholding, won't even sit on her potty and gets upset if you suggest it. My eldest also has learning disabilities so I'm finding it really hard to watch her for signs and 'catch' when I have to be hypervigilant in watching and regulating him.

I don't have anyone who could help watch my eldest unfortunately.

Does anyone have any tips?

Lynne Coulombe

Currently in the same situation! My eldest had it down pat within three days. My youngest and strong willed is now going on 13 days and we just had our first day with no accidents yesterday. She started doing better once I eased up on the prompting and stressing out about her not getting it. She also follows her older brother to the bathroom and my theory is that she watched him peeing standing and was confused as to why she would have to sit, so I started asking him to pee sitting if she follows him to the bathroom. I also bring her with me and say listen mommy is peeing, then ask her to listen when she sits on the potty (suggested by another mother in this group). It has been working, I just had to keep telling myself every child learns at different rates and that's ok, may take longer then the "7 days in block 1" and that's totally ok!

Your child will get there too!!

23 Std.

Antworten

Elyse Ridlehoover

1 Tag

.

Daughter has been potty trained since 21 months. Now at almost 24 months, she's peeing in her panties all the time. She knows she's peeing but just pees in them. We get on to her and she totally understands but still goes in panties. She goes in her car seat, she peed on the couch today, while playing, ect... but she totally knows and just seems to totally knows what she's doing. It's very frustrating.

Anyone else have this happen? What do we do?! I had her in no panties tonight with pants on and that may have helped-not sure yet.

Amy Catherine

How long has it been going on? I had something similar with my son, really couldn't understand and then he got Hand Foot and Mouth - he was just run down, sad and cba. After he was over it, he was fine again.

22 Std.

Antworten

Gia Shah ☐ fühlt sich erschöpft.

1 Tag

Boy, age 2 years 9 months. Spring break potty training.

On day 1 of Block 1. Naked at home, pee pads everywhere in the living room (we have carpet) and a small potty in the vicinity. Bedrooms off access. Bathroom open and has a potty seat with steps available for choice.

Lots of ice water, lemonade, juice and popsicles.

Woke up at 7 am. Naked and took diaper off himself at 7.51 am.

9.18 am - pee on pee pad

10.22 am - pee on pee pad

10.26 am - pee on pee pad

10.55 am - pee on toddler tower in kitchen

11.14 am - pee on toddler tower in kitchen

12.22 pm - pee in potty while reading a book

1.06 pm - pee on pee pad

1.12 pm - pee on pee pad

2.01 pm - pee in potty while reading a book. Placed on the potty at 1.25 pm.

2.20 pm - playing at the window with potty behind him. Sat by himself and peed.

3.34 pm - pee in potty while reading a book. Placed on the potty 10 mins before started reading.

3.46 pm - pee in potty while reading a book, continuing from above.

5.09 pm - pee on pee pad

5.10 pm - pee in potty at catch midstream. Placed him on it.

5.53 pm - peed while standing on toddler table.

6.45 pm - placed on the potty and reading a book.....

The day is not over. Projected sleep time is 8 pm.

Based on this, how is tomorrow going to go? Is my kid not ready? Abandon? Or continue?

This is our second attempt. First attempt was during Xmas break and we gave up after day 1.

Any advice appreciated. It's 80F in San Francisco - we're having one of those Indian summers and being stuck at home in an apartment with no back yard is killing us. Please say it gets better and it will click.

Signed an exhausted mama.

Meredith Smethie

You're doing great! My biggest suggestion is to stop tracking every single minute. You'll drive yourself crazy over thinking it. Just pay attention to his signals and work towards more pees in the potty. Any progression is a success. Some days you will back track. Totally normal. Keep going.

1 Tag

Antworten

Natalie Thomas

1 Tag

.

Today we are on day 16, my 26 month today held her pee for 7.5 hours. Sometimes holding it 4-5 hours.

She likes to be outside in our backyard and we have a dog. We have to watch her carefully since she likes to mimic our dog and pee on the grass and the patio (we always bring out the small potty but try to have her go inside before being outside.

When outside today and holding her pee for so long, knowing the potty was 2 steps awa... Mehr anzeigen

Mala CF

Mine only has accidents outside too. Same age. She said it means she has to stop having fun 😂

1 Tag

Antworten

Lara Robertson

1 Tag

Day 3 with our 23-month-old and wees are going really well! He's self-initiating and heading off to go on his own.

Poo has been a bit trickier though. He clearly needs to go and will dance around holding on for ages, then when it gets too much he just lets it go. We haven't managed to catch one in time yet as it all happens so fast, and he gets a bit upset if we try to rush him onto the potty.

He's back at daycare on Wednesday and we'd really love to avoid going back to nappies if we can't get the poo sorted, particularly as he seems to have mastered wees. Any tips or advice would be hugely appreciated please!

Danielle Parry

• Folgen

1 Tag

We successfully trained our 3.5 yr old son in June (surprised it went smoothly but we shouldn't have waited so long) & I just need someone to tell me to rip off the bandaid and go for it again with our 2.5 yr old daughter before my maternity leave is over. Taking courage to go again from the masses 🤪

Giana Morgan

1 Tag

Hi! We did oh crap back in January and had some ups and downs but overall doing well! My son is 2.5. He previously popped on the potty here and there and now for the past month or more he saves it for his sleep. He either wakes up with it first thing in the morning (not a big deal) or poops about 90 mins into his nap around 230 and wakes up upset, sometimes doesn't go back to sleep. I have him sit on potty before nap but it seems like... Mehr anzeigen

Awel Muscroft

1 Tag

What happens if we aren't ready to move past Block 1 in time?

Hey! Thinking the worst here as I'm only on Day 2 of what will be 10 days I can fully dedicate to this (before I have to go back to work and my twins are back at nursery).

Fairly confident that one of my boys will at least be able to move to Block 2 by the end of the Easter holidays, BUT, what happens if his brother isn't ready? Do we hope for the best and still go down the commando route with him, or would that jus... Mehr anzeigen

Nicola Wat

Remember that in order to move to block 2 the book only requires that a light bulb has gone off in their head. You're looking ... Mehr anzeigen

1 Tag

Antworten

Gabriella Siân Weston-Tooms

1 Tag

So I'm on day 2 of block 1 with my 24 month old boy. Day 1 he didn't make any to the potty. Everytime he started to wee or poo I got him to the potty but then he would stop and kick up a tantrum to get off the potty. Day 2 (today) he started to wee so I got him on the potty and he would finish in the potty. To me this is a massive win as it's big progress from yesterday. But is he progressing correctly or should he be initiating to go on the potty to start the wee on day 2?

Amy Catherine

My little boy is 24 months too, he started initiating some on day 7 but only when naked and he could see come out 😂 then he'd run to the potty. Think it takes time

1 Tag

Antworten

Julia Sharp

1 Tag

Started block 1 today. This upcoming week is spring break and we had already decided several weeks ago this was the only week we had to potty train. I'm taking Monday and Tuesday off work so we can dedicate 4 straight days with nothing to do but potty train. It wasn't really until a few days ago that it dawned on us that tomorrow is Easter.

The plan is to go to my mom's house and do an Easter egg hunt and dinner around 3-6pm. My mom's house is only about 10 min away and an environment that my kid knows, but I wouldn't say is like a "relaxed and familiar environment". We don't spend a lot of time there. Just stopping by and holidays. Most of the time my mom comes here.

Anyway. My husband doesn't want to go to Easter now and my mom won't move it to my house (she has good reasons, not being unreasonable. She could have moved it to my house if I had given her more time than the day before).

It hasn't even been a full day, but block 1 isn't going well at all. He refuses to sit on the potty at all. Totally freaks out. Stiffens and throws a tantrum. I honestly thought we'd be further along by now. He was so interested in the toilet before and 100% understands it and I rant afraid of the toilet, or hasn't been before.

I really don't want to miss Easter and the egg hunt my family. What do you think we should do if we're not to block 2 yet by tomorrow afternoon? Any advice on getting over the sitting on the potty freak out in block 1?

Gina Dongas

I would bring a small portable potty there and just try it

1 Tag

Antworten

Lori Armstrong

1 Tag

.

Ok help walk me through this. My daughter is 35 months. She is wearing a shirt and no bottoms and using the little potty pretty consistently. Maybe 2 accidents in a day. But with underwear she will pee every time in it. Like 5-8 underwear a day. What do I do?

LilyLover1590

Did you skip the loose shorts/pants block (2)? In the book she mentions that underwear is too close to diapers as they fit snugly and that you should do loose pants/shorts or a dress for about a month before moving to underwear.

1 Tag

Antworten

Naomi Mwangi

1 Tag

1st poop.

I need to hear if our 1st poop was a success coz it was brutal. Son is 2.5 (31months), today is day 3.

.So this morning I could see he needed to poop. He was holding it so hard until he eventually started crying and rolling around on the floor. He cried and cried. I sat on the floor with him and told him his body is saying he needs to poop and the potty was right there for him. I encouraged him over and over. Gave him hugs and sang songs. Eventually the poop was com... Mehr anzeigen

Alice Lenehan

My son took a while to get comfortable doing poos on the potty BEFORE it was all coming out, he would roll around and stick his bum in the air for hours and no matter how many times he sat on the potty he wouldn't do it there, he would hold and hold until it had to come out, at which point I moved him and it all (usually) went in the potty. We started a routine of sitting on the potty for a while after a bath building Duplo towers, he got comfortable with that situation and started doing all his poos then, but rarely any other time of day. However he now does them happily on the potty, even without either of us thinking he's gonna do one he just does it 😂

No advice regarding the blocks though as we started with this method and then kinda freestyled it haha x

1 Tag

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Carla Lomeli

2 Tage

How long until you transitioned to using the big potty full time?

We are about 4 months in and still have the little potty in bedroom for wake up and bed time pees.

Paola Maria Dguez

Right away. Makes it easier down the road. Start giving the option, do you want to use the big potty or the little one? And then eventually “we’re going to use the big one today”. It’s easier when you need to go out in public, on vacation, starting school etc

1 Tag

Antworten

Nicole Gamache

2 Tage

PRE BEDTIME POTTY HELP

How do you get your LO to use the potty (in their room) in the time between you tell them goodnight and they fall asleep?

We are dealing with a few issues at the moment but I would appreciate help with the first particularly.

*PRE BEDTIME: My guy has been pee trained for a year and a half. But we have started trying night time/poop training and having difficulty. He keeps peeing/pooping before falling asleep in his bed or when we used a pull up. I tried telling him to use the potty on his own but switched gears to have him call for me to take him to the potty. But I’m not there in the room with him to encourage him to use the potty. He’s never called for us really while in his room, and despite showing him and trying to illustrate it, I don’t think he connects that we can hear him on the monitor. I’m at a loss.

If you have the time to read more...

NIGHTTIME: he keeps peeing the bed throughout the night. I tried the 10 and 2 potty time but he’s been wetting the bed and sleeping through it everytime I go in his room. I even tried going in 3 times a night but he’s was still like sleeping through wet clothes/sheets. I did limit liquids too.

POOP: Little man has always pooped before nap/bed in his diaper. I’m having trouble having him stop this. He has both just pooped in his pants and then got upset and we changed him. But he has also pooped in his pants (commando) and then just napped with it that way. Thoughts?

AmbitiousSalamander618

Seems like a big gap in potty training and nap/night. Does it take him long to settle asleep as normally going to bed sit on the potty then bed. I myself only start night training when pull ups were dry for consecutive days.

You say he poop's in his diaper before his nap (do you mean soon after you put it on for nap bed?) does in poop in the day in his potty?

Some children prefer the big toilet maybe try that before nap and bed. If you know poop is always at these times encourage more time on the potty to allow it to come and break the cycle.

1 Tag

Antworten

Kay Broon

2 Tage

I need some help with a severe regression!

My son is 33 months old. He has been fully day trained since May last year. I don't think he's had a single accident in about five months? He self initiates and if we leave the bathroom doors open will take himself to the toilet, wipe and flush (we still help him wipe after poops!)

In the last week, he has been having 3-4 pee accidents whilst at home. He hasn't had any accidents at nursery. If we're in public or at a friends house he will tell me that he needs the toilet and I'll take him. The past three days, he has continually peed on the floor, not once peeing in the toilet. Today he pooped on the floor (he never even pooped on the floor during potty training). These accidents have taken place whilst naked, commando and fully clothed; it doesn't seem to make a difference.

After each accident we don't overreact we just say "oh you had an accident, next time we go to the toilet". I've asked him a few times throughout the day if he needs to pee and he always says no (though even at the beginning he hated being asked and always preferred self initiating).

What on earth do we do? Stay consistent and ride it out? I am 32 weeks pregnant and tearing my hair out.

Carla Lomeli

Don't ask, prompt? Non negotiable if he hasn't gone by a certain amount of time.

1 Tag

Antworten

Amy Catherine

2 Tage

I'm in block 1 with my 24month old son, it's day 5 but he had to have two days at my parents were they didn't fully follow the plan (unavoidable we had a funeral to attend).

We are back on track and he has had all wee's in the potty today and for the final two started to pee on the floor and then ran to the potty - so fully self initiated. The others I have been taking him once an hour ish. He doesn't talk much so doesn't yet say potty or pee.

Would you do another full day commando to solidify the self-initiation tomorrow or move on to loose leggings?

We have another week until he goes back to nursery.

Kendra Bain

They don't need to self-initiate to move on to block 2, in fact the book says not to expect self-initiation until about 3 weeks into potty training

2 Tage

Antworten

JoAnn Smith

2 Tage

Block 1 with boy girl twins 22 months.

Day 2 and my son has had a lot of pee accidents. Only caught 1 promoted pee on day one. My daughter has been doing better although today she held her pee from 8:30am to about 11:30/45 and had a small accident because I had to go pee. I feel like I picked a bad time to start because we have a birthday party tomorrow and then Easter but I don't want to wait anymore. It's a lot with 2. Has anyone had a kiddo who holds for a long time to pee... Mehr anzeigen

Kory Cathryn Bell

I have almost 21 month old girl twins and I'm about to start potty training too and I just wanna say twin life is crazy and you are doing great. It's a LOT with two.

2 Tage

Antworten

Caroline Crawdad

2 Tage

.

We've been in Block 1 for a while. She won't go in the potty but she has gone from peeing everywhere to holding it until she gets a pull up on at nap time or bedtime. What do we do now? 22 months.

Christine Rapposelli

Ugh, so hard. Have you tried sitting her during transitions? Like before/after naps and meals? Before we started potty training, we let our daughter sit during transitions and one day out of nowhere she peed in the potty during one of them and it was like a switch flicked and we started later that week lol.

2 Tage

Antworten

Kellie Bingham Gonsalves

2 Tage

Day 1 and my 26 month old boy was doing great (peeing in potty and showing signs) until he started asking to play outside. He loves to play outside and I feel TERRIBLE telling him no. Should we just do commando outside and see how it goes? How am I supposed to keep this kiddo inside for days when the weather is just now getting nice and he loses his mind if I tell him no to outside 🤦🏻

Tabby Sadler

Try commando tomorrow and a little time outside but bring the potty

2 Tage

Antworten

Ashley Morgan

2 Tage

Regression Help

Looking for advice because I'm feeling really discouraged with potty training my almost 21 month old.

Before a recent trip (Disney), things were going really well. He had been potty trained for 6 weeks prior. He was having very few accidents, self-initiating some pees, staying dry for naps and most nights, and generally seemed to "get it." We did pull ups at Disney and he was peeing half in pull ups half in the potty.

Since the trip 3 weeks ago it feels like everything has fallen apart. We're now having at least 1–3 pee accidents a day, and today was especially rough. Poop is a non-issue.

What's confusing is that he clearly can do it — he'll pee at transitions, occasionally tell us (though often late), and sometimes hold it. But then other times he seems completely unaware or doesn't care at all.

We've tried:

- Prompting at transitions (before leaving, after arriving, before/after nap, etc.)
- Backing off prompting to avoid resistance
- Watching for cues and reacting quickly
- Commando at home, undies for outings

Lately it feels like:

- He's resisting prompts more
- Awareness is inconsistent or late
- He's having more full accidents and dribbles
- He sometimes just stands there while peeing instead of stopping

I'm struggling to figure out:

- Is this a regression from travel or something else?
- Should I go back to a more hands-on approach (like naked/reset)?
- Am I over-prompting or under-prompting?
- How do I help him care/notice again?

Would love any advice, especially from those who potty trained early. The books focus on regressions seems to be more on a new sibling which is not the case here. This phase is feeling harder than the beginning 😊

Whitney Langford

Okay I feel like a lot of this is so familiar! We potty trained at 23 months and just went on a trip at 25 months to my sister in laws wedding so we used pull ups on the plane and during the wedding ceremony since we were all in the wedding. It was rough during our trip because I think the pull up was confusing but I didn't know what else to do on long plane rides. I still just kept prompting and we would set a timer and make it exciting when the timer goes off (if he was resisting). We've been home for about a week and I did two days of naked again and now we are back in pants (no undies) and he had one pee accident today. I notice I'm prompting more but I'm still trying to follow the blocks. I'm not going back to diapers. It sounds like you're doing everything right and I think just keep going. From what I've read, the younger they are, these regressions seem to be harder but then they figure it out. You're doing great!! 🍌

2 Tage

Antworten

Christine Rapposelli

2 Tage

Question for those with "fully potty trained" kids:

Hi wonderful group! I'm not sure how helpful this information will be as i'm sure there is a ton of variation...but for those who consider their kids fully potty trained, what does pee frequency look like? Our 19 month old is doing great. We're about 3 weeks in and she is averaging about an hour between pees and i'm wondering how much consolidation to really expect.

Sometimes she has several pees back to back like 20 minutes apart (seems to be related to poop coming soon) and other times she goes 2 hours in between pees.

I'm hoping we can figure out a normal rhythm once we get our poop situation ironed out.

Thanks all!

Kelly Johnson

Early on, it varies a ton! The most important part was just that he knew he needed to and we got to a potty! I noticed he'd hold it longer when we were out and about generally. Slowly, he evened out, and one day we didn't think about it anymore other than before naps and leaving the house potties.

2 Tage

Antworten

Anna Pugliano

2 Tage

Help! My 21 mo daughter is ten days into potty training. She refuses to pee in her diaper at nighttime, but, she doesn't want to pee on the potty either. She wakes up and has full on meltdowns (screaming, kicking, headbutting walls, biting, etc.) that last anywhere from 30-90 minutes. We are all exhausted and miserable. Last night was a "good night" where she didn't meltdown, but she was awake from 1-4 a.m. Suggestions??

[Of note, during the day she asks to use the potty about 70% of the time, but will randomly (1-2 times per day) decide she doesn't want to go and will have a similar screaming meltdown in the bathroom.]

Tabby Sadler

Following for any advice. My son is 21 months too and it's meltdown city in general atm. He's similar with multiple wake ups so we've tried him on the potty at each wake up and he's refused to sit. He also is cutting naps short because he clearly needs to pee but refuses to go right before a nap.

2 Tage

Antworten

Brooklyn Griffith Culp

2 Tage

How long did your child have accidents daily?

Tomtom23217

Months for me. Every kid is different. We just turned 3 in Feb and he has been accident free since a few weeks before. But we started in October

2 Tage

Antworten

Awel Muscroft

3 Tage

Block 1 - 2.5 y/o Twin Boys

Hi all, we're only on Day 1 of Block 1. Doing our best to follow the method and read their cues (haven't quite figured either of them out yet) but the boys have spent a considerable amount of time on the potty this morning as it's a novelty. Trying to discourage unless they know they need to go (or if it's been a while since their last accident) but, as a result of the time spent sitting on it, we've had a lot of wees in the potty which is great.

Just before naptime, we had one completely unprompted wee on the potty from one of my twins (T2), the other (T1) is only peeing while on the potty (prompted/finishing after an accident, or just sitting).

A question for twin/multiple parents - if one twin continues to self initiate, do we move him on to Block 2 even if his brother isn't ready? I'm guessing the answer is yes but not sure if practical.

I know it's best to do day and night training simultaneously but we're just not brave enough to night train yet.

We have 9 days to lock in before they go back to nursery after Easter, so we really need to figure it out as best we can during this time

Hoping for some wins after their nap 🤔👍

JoAnn Smith

I have 22 month old twins. We literally started yesterday. My son has had 5-6 accidents and 2 pees on the potty. My daughter had a self initiated, 2 successful prompted and 2 accidents. We tried to over load them with juice (which they normally don't get) and water to encourage a lot of pee. I can see them moving to different blocks at different times. My daughter when she had her accidents clapping cause she knew she went pee. My son stops and notices he's peeing but we have yet to be successful at stopping mid pee to finish in the potty. But he immediately then says "uh oh" so he's aware at least.

I remember my first who is now 3 he was 19 months and he had a lot of accidents the first day. We kept him naked at home majority of the time for 3 months because we were home and it was summer. 🧑 but we moved on to block 2 after 3 days without successful poops because my boys both are not normal poopers. My first poops every over day or every 2 days.

I also plan to use diapers for nap for the first 3-6 months, then tackle naps. Once they get 2.5 or closer to three we will tackle night time. I waited till a little of 2.5 for nighttime with my first and it took no time at all. I only chose to do it that way because I was on summer break with my first and waiting for the twins because they share a room and they don't always nap because they bother each other 🤔

All that to say in much less words. Each child is different. So moving them along at different stages makes sense.

2 Tage

Antworten

Brianna Ritacco

3 Tage

“Fully potty trained” for preschool

Hi everyone! We are considering moving to a new school for preschool, but they are saying our son (who will be 2 yrs 9 months on the start date) must be fully potty trained which includes being able to fully wipe on their own even for poop and no accidents. We started in February and he is doing really well but at school still has maybe one accident per day. There's still like 6 months between now and when he would start the new school, but is it totally unrealistic for them to be that independent by 2years 9 months???

UnderstandingGrape7273

My daughter is 3.5, has been trained since 20 months and still needs help wiping poo, her arms just can't reach far enough. Totally unrealistic.

3 Tage

Antworten

Amie B

3 Tage

Hi everyone!

We're 1 week into training my strong willed 2.5yr old boy. When he's naked (block 1) he is brilliant. Zero accidents, able to hold and then go pee and poo on the potty. Has started to pee on toilet when he's upstairs for a bath etc. We only have one toilet in the house and its upstairs so he has pottys downstairs for speed.

Soon as we add clothing of any kind for block 2 (commando and just easy to pull down shorts/trousers etc not pants yet as it feels too much like a nappy) and it all goes wrong. Zero attempt at getting himself to the potty he just pees where he is stood.

He can't be bare forever and it's been a week now. He's got 10 stickers on his potty chart and when he went to nursery/daycare on Wednesday he was allowed to go commando he had leggings on with lots of changes of clothes packed for him and had just 1 accident. He held his pee for a long time so very capable of being a bit of a camel! So any advice for this block 2 stumble and absolute battle of wills is welcomed.

This morning it was "no toilet mummy" "no potty mummy" soon as I left the room to take his little brother up for a nap he peed and poed in his pajamas 🙄

Then we picked out some shorts together and he has just crouched and peed in those too.

We clean up messes together, he is praised when he does the right thing, and he is reminded regularly (without nagging, because then the defiance kicks in). What am I missing 😞

I also say "push trousers down and sit" and help him so that he's getting practice with that movement. He can pull and push his trousers down himself but he's a very busy boy and forgets/gets distracted!

Caitlyn White

How baggy are his pants? I had next size up baggy so that they don't feel tight or secure - and I still heavily assist even when he's in pants and never pressure him to pull or push his pants down himself - (that'll come eventually) but the focus is more on reps of getting the pee and poop in the potty ... I still help with pants 90% of the time as he can't fully do it on his own successfully until he works on that muscle.

2 Tage

Antworten

Paola Maria Dguez

3 Tage

I need a refresher, when can child move on to block 2 and from there when can they move to block 3?

Did this method 3 years ago and now trying it with my second. Just can't recall how many successful trips to the bathroom mean you move to the next block.

For reference: 29 month old girl !

Ali Resch

You can move to block two. We moved after one day

3 Tage

Antworten

Jade Knapp

3 Tage

Please can someone offer help

My daughter at 2yrs 4m we potty trained successfully (we didn't know about this book until just now) however, when her baby sister arrived she had a huge regression. Then we put her back in nappies, after 10days she took herself out and was fine, until she turned 3 and moved to pre-school. We hit the 2nd regression. We haven't really got her back from it yet and it's been 3months. She knows what she is doing but keeps withholding her wee. Do I sta... Mehr anzeigen

Vanessa Ophorst Kaufman

You might want to read chapter 16: The Reset

2 Tage

Antworten

Kandice Mann

3 Tage

We just finished day 1! 🥰 She is 23 months old. She is at the "I'm peeing" stage. No full pees in the potty but most made at least a little in the potty. She is telling us "oh no" or "potty" midstream. Bedtime was hard though. Every time she was almost asleep, she peed a little and would jump up to tell us. Then she would sit on the potty for several minutes, no new pee, put the diaper back on, and lay back down. Repeat 4x. I finally ... Mehr anzeigen

Kendra Bain

There's a section in the book on the Bedtime Potty Pit. It's page 122 in my edition

3 Tage

Antworten

Naomi Mwangi

3 Tage

Day 1.

Today was Day 1. My son just went down for the night. I'm wondering if we are on the right track. He is 2.5yrs old. Gonna be 31 months next week. In the morning, I brought out the potty and told him we were done with diapers. I put on a show about going to the potty. Then I prompted him to go. He went pee immediately. Then after that, he refused completely. I could see he needed to go but he would just refuse. I put him in a pull up for naptime. In the afternoon, i would notice he needs to pee and tell him. He went once then again refused. But this time I turned away the heard him giggle, when I turned, he was peeing on the floor laughing. I told him pee goes in the potty and had him help me clean up. He got really sad. I think he felt that I was upset. In the evening, I asked him to go and he did. So overall we had 3 full pees in the potty. He did pee in his bath though. Lol. He is in bed now in a pull up. No poop today.

How did we do?

LilyLover1590

We are on the same track as you! Yesterday was day 1 for us. We had a similar day with 2 full pees in the potty and 3 on the floor. She pooped in my hand but i was able to put it in the potty and then put her on the potty and follow through with the cleanup and flush.

I would consider this a successful day 1 for both of us!

Here's to day 2!!!

3 Tage

Antworten

Brianne Nicholson

3 Tage

.

Any advice for a 34 month old boy who doesn't seem to recognize the need to pee? He knows when he is peeing & will tell us. Pee sign isn't obvious.

We did the Oh Crap method with 6 days bottomless then 5 weeks commando. After 9 weeks we mostly gave up & now do a mix of underwear & pull up. He does great using the potty when we prompt before something he wants to do. But he usually doesn't want to be bothered to stop & try.

Cin Soet

3 Tage

Help 😓 only on Day 1 and my daughter seems to be afraid of the potty and the toilet, I can catch her peeing, but can't get her to sit 😓 any advice?

Anna Freeman

Advisor

You can try to just catch her pee with a cup or the potty insert for a while and maybe tomorrow or the next day she'll feel more comfortable to sit.

3 Tage

Antworten

Madison Stafford

3 Tage

My 28M old is having zero accidents and self prompting for pee and poop at home. At school we have yet to have a poop in the toilet and have had an accident everyday. We will be two weeks in from starting block one on Saturday.

Any suggestions? He is only in a class of eight students, and two of them are potty training. The teachers are patient with him and watching him. He'll tell them he needs to poop. They sit him on the toilet and he just doesn't go. This may repeat a couple times and then he finally just goes in his underwear (he has to have underwear on at his school).

Thanks for any suggestions!

Nichole Marie

Following, having the same experience

3 Tage

Antworten

Brooke Mahoney

3 Tage

.

HELP! We started potty training my 2.5 year old girl last Friday. She stayed home naked for 4 days, commando for 1 day, and 1 day of undies before going back to day care today. She will pee in the potty happily if we prompt her, and only had 1 accident wearing undies/pants yesterday, cause I prompted her too late. She only really pees if we prompt her every 30 minutes. She wants to poop in the potty but it's just not happening until she sleeps in diapers.

— Today was her first day back to day care and she's had SO many pee accidents. They have her sit every 30 minutes and sometimes she'll pee, sometimes she won't, and then pee her undies shortly after.

First question- any recommendations for getting her to poop in the potty vs her sleep diapers (every 1.5-2 days)

2nd question - any advice/solidarity for kids who have way more accidents at school then home?

Kirsty Weatherspoon

Have you read the book

3 Tage

Antworten

Julie Viehweger

3 Tage

.

Few questions about potty training ... Mehr anzeigen

Nicola Wat

Timed potty sits is not what this method is about at all. I recommend reading the book. It's a worthwhile read. I can also share a summary if that would help.

Also, I used multiple types of potty's / toilet with my girl.

3 Tage

Antworten

Sandi Bangasser Evans

3 Tage

.

Help, my son doesn't care if he's wet

My son is 29 months old. He will pee in the potty when I ask him to sit but he just wets his pants unless I ask him to sit. He does not care if he's wet and prefers to poop in his pants (we're doing commando again). His preschool just wants him in pull-ups which doesn't help. Any ideas on how to get him to want to stay dry and use the potty regularly? I'm really struggling and don't know what else to try.

Anna Freeman

Advisor

When did you start? You shouldn't be expecting him to initiate, you prompt when you see his signal and that's how you avoid accidents for a long time in the beginning. Give him as much time bottomless at home as possible, pooping in pants can become a hard habit to break.

3 Tage

Antworten

Kristen Gibbs

4 Tage

.

Regression?

Please help my son will be 3 this month and has been potty trained completely for a good 3 months even at night. He would stop playing and tell me "I need to go potty!" All of a sudden he is having accidents several times a day. I'm not sure what happened or how to fix it 😞

Kristin Strong

Any changes in routine? Our son is on spring break from daycare and I consider myself pretty attentive. He had several accidents so far this week even after having gone potty 5 min before.

4 Tage

Antworten

Kelsey Huwa

4 Tage

.

I have a 17 month old girl who we started introducing potty training to two weeks ago, and at first she really had no idea what was going on but the last week she had several successes in going on the potty, pooped completely independently on her little potty two days ago and this morning. She is making progress but yesterday and today she would act like she needed to go (pee and poop, grabbing the crotch and bottom) and I would get her to the potty and she would arch her back and REFUSE to sit down and start crying hysterically. Can anyone help me understand this?!

Rachel Nelson

Following in case someone has great insight. My 21m girl is doing the same thing

4 Tage

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Maria Huizenga

4 Tage

.

Nighttime training help!

My son is 3yr 4months and has been daytime potty training since 2.5yrs. He did great and hasn't used a pulled up for naps for about 7 months. We decided to try to night train because I'm really sick of the pull-ups and he wants to wear big boy undies at night. However, he was still having wet pull-ups.

We are taking him potty at 1am, he pees and goes right back to bed, then is dry until morning. If we wake him around 11:30pm, he is wet in the morning, if he wait until 2 to wake him, he is already wet. So 1am seems to be the sweet spot; however, it's been 3 weeks and I'm exhausted and this isn't really progressing. What are my next steps?

Jesse Lawrence

4 Tage

.

Advice needed. We have been on block one for 2 weeks now. She gets the idea of potty when she has to go pee she kinda has a meltdown, pooping is easier for her. Any idea on how to get my child to relax and let go?

Ashley Calder

We had better luck in block 2 then block 1 - and everything I read said staying in block 1 too long can slow the process and block 1 did not need to be perfect so we moved on and so far my girl is crushing that!

4 Tage

Antworten

Destiny Jog

• Folgen

4 Tage

.

Help!!

We potty trained late September, right before my son turned 3 (in Nov)

He did pretty good at the beginning- now he will go a few days doing well, but then he'll have a day or two where he will mess up either pee and /or poop.

It's like he doesn't want to stop what he's doing to go to the bathroom.

I've tried everything it seems like.

Any tips on what to try??

Also, At what point do you discipline for accidents vs just saying "next time it all goes in the potty" etc?

I feel like he should be over the big accidents and only have them occasionally. It's really stressful as I thought he'd be 100% by now...

Pic so I don't get lost

MagentaTurtle4028

Are you having him help clean up the mess when he has an accident?

4 Tage

Antworten

Lori Armstrong

4 Tage

Hello! New here. So my daughter is 35 months and I was starting to train this week with padded underwear and constant reminders and potty watch. She goes in the potty and underwear. I was reading this and thought to try to do this method instead. My son is 22 months old, which is in the recommended range. It looks like. I'm debating just potty training them together. I don't know if I could watch both of them that closely. I also have a five year-old and a newborn my life is going to be chaos for a long time so there's not a better time to do it really. 🙄

Is that idea just insane?

Elissa Cee

The author mentions how its cool to hire it out, if you can afford having help that might be an idea. Sincerely a lazy mom that feels like 4 kids is a job for more than one person 🙄

4 Tage

Antworten

Julia Prevost Eagle

4 Tage

Im so freaking stressed and frustrated with the whole potty training DISASTER. We are on week 3 and he has not made any improvements. He won't let me know if he has to potty. I have to watch his signs and even then sometimes he won't give them before just peeing on the floor. If I fuss him he will throw himself on the floor and PEE.(not fussing for anything potty related) We will go through every pair of shorts before he just walks around naked bc he will pee in every single one of them. I will sit him on the potty and he will pee and then less than 10 minutes later there is pee on the floor or in his pants. Im exhausted 😭

Kristy Shen

I gave up on the "cues" and started promoting my kid every 90 mins. That worked better. Also bring the potty next to the activity he was busy doing so he wouldn't have to be interrupted to go pee. It clicked suddenly one day. I almost quit and good thing I didn't because I was only 2 days away from him getting it at that pt. Hang in there. You got this!

4 Tage

Antworten

Taylor Marie

4 Tage

.

I am only on day 2 of training my 22 month old but I am already stressed lol. I've been watching like a hawk and interrupted his pees. He has been able to hold it until at the potty and then finish. However, he's never once gone on the potty when I've put him on (every 30 mins), he always starts on the floor. Should I be worried about that? Also he is holding his poop. He lets out a small niblet (lol sry) and then jumps off, and then by the time I've dumped it, he has started going on the floor again but jumps off the potty too fast to complete his poop. I've tried reading books and he'll sit and listen then hop off and repeat the niblet process. Ideas?

Meredith Smethie

Totally normal, expect most of the first week to be a stressful disaster! Also don't put him on every 30 minutes. You're trying to learn his cues and help him learn the feeling. Only bring him to the potty when he's starting to go. Hopefully that will cut down on the post potty niblets. But it will get better!!!

4 Tage

Antworten

Meli Lopez

▪ Folgen

5 Tage

Airplane question

We started potty training our daughter at 22 months, about 40 days ago. We have a trip coming up in 2 weeks with two flights—one is 1 hour and the other is 4 hours. She will probably fall asleep in the second flight.

She's been dry for naps for 2 months and rarely has accidents (no pee accidents, just occasional poop). We've been in Block 5 for a few weeks now. She's comfortable peeing in different places and has never had an accident in the car. She still wears a diaper at night, and about once a week it's dry.

Would you recommend using a pull-up for the flights? I'd prefer to avoid any regression. I do have UpAiry underwear.

Thank you

Alissa Brand Iwicki

We called it travel underwear when we put my son in pull-ups early on while traveling. We still did bathroom breaks but it was completely fine.

4 Tage

Antworten

Elissa Cee

5 Tage

So if we ditch the diapers do we also ditch the change table? I dont plan to night train yet.

Mala CF

We're at 26m and still use the table at night after bath etc. No plans to stop 😊 my back appreciates this kindness

5 Tage

Antworten

Cady Womack

5 Tage

What would you do? We're on day 5⁽⁰⁶⁾ and my son (almost 22 months) has been doing great. Day 1/2 were a little less smooth but progressing. Day 3 was fantastic. A lot of self inflating. Day 4 I moved to block 2 and had some accidents but more wins than losses. Now day 5... my son has woke up with a low grade fever. He's only wanting to be held, pee on me while I was holding him after trying to prompt him several times to go because he was doing a pee dance which isn't his normal sign. Anyway, I guess my question is do I throw in the towel today? Go back to block 1 to take obstacles away for now? I just don't want to lose progress.

Nicola Wat

The book recommends that if they get sick a few days into potty training to re-diaper (unless it's only a minor cold).

My girl was doing so well until the afternoon of day 4 when she got vomiting & diarrhoea. I put a diaper back on her for the time of her sickness. It was the best call. She still asked to use the potty at various times, but most importantly she got back on track really well once she was feeling better and back on the oh crap method.

It's ok to go back to diapers for now.

5 Tage

Antworten

Molly Kornkven

5 Tage

Dribbles and small accidents

We have been potty training for 3 months. He is now 27 months. Poop is no issue and he hasn't had a full pee accident in over 3 weeks. But we cannot seem to stop with the dribbling in underwear or very small pee accidents that just get his underwear wet. This often times happens at least 2-3 times daily. I can't figure out how to get him to realize he needs to go before he lets a little out. Any recommendations or advice?

Heather McAnear Sloan

My oldest was the same. It took a few months but he finally stopped.

5 Tage

Antworten

Kenya Ramirez

5 Tage

Does anyone else have two different potty training toddlers in one?

My daughter is 27m, we are on week 2 of potty training and currently on block two. She's been doing really well, she wakes up dry and we go to the potty and she pees, we never have any accidents in the mornings. She takes her nap at 12pm, wakes up dry and pees in potty. Not sure but a switch suddenly happens, it's like I have a whole different child. She starts having more pee accidents, she sits on the potty and immediately gets up and a minute later she has an accident.

I'm writing this while she's in the shower, because she pooped (she was bare bottom since she was having back to back accidents) and SHE WAS PLAYING WITH HER POOP! I tried not to freak out but it was unavoidable. 🤦‍♀️ I need to know if I should keep going with block two, go back to block one, I don't know! It feels like all our efforts goes out the window once it hits a certain hour

Stephanie Bianchi

We went through this the first 3 weeks with my 20 month old where after 4pm it was like nonstop pee every 20 minutes. We seem to be over that and I've noticed it definitely depends on how tired she is. The more tired she gets the more she seems to lose the control and cue

4 Tage

Antworten

Maura Paul

5 Tage

What do you do when your child is yelling poop over and over?

Sitting (not long enough) and getting up again and again.

It's right there and ready to come out. She visibly stressed out and scared to let it out.

I'm not making her do anything. I'm telling her she's safe. It's beginning to stress me out.

Nichole Marie

I sat with my boy and offered a hug during 🙏 it worked short term & now he only goes in his nighttime diaper 😊

5 Tage

Antworten

Emily Hay

5 Tage

.

When should I start night training? My toddler is almost 2.5 years old. We started potty training in September (23 months) and it took until January for him to be actually potty trained, and even now it's not unusual for him to have an accident during the day. His diapers at night get super full by morning so I can't imagine how many times we would have to wake him to pee? Is it ok to wait until he's closer to 3?

Ashley Calder

Honestly I did pull ups until my daughter naturally just started waking up dry. It's not conventional but it clicked around 3 and we ditched the pull ups. No night accidents for almost two years.

5 Tage

Antworten

Lauren Novack

5 Tage

.

UPDATE: I spoke to the daycare. We are now officially starting commando there, with her being taken to the potty every 30 minutes. FWIW, they said that every 30m is perfectly normal. I fully believe that switching to full time potty training is going to make the difference and she'll learn to hold it for longer. I wanted to ask your opinions on this before speaking to the daycare.

How long did it take for your kiddo to go from "holding it" for 30 minutes to holding it for 2 hours?

Having an issue with daycare. Kid just turned two, she is great at home and pees every 30m - some promoted by me and some self prompted. She's practically perfect if we keep her home for a week or two (vacation etc) and if she was home FT she'd be trained by now. Without getting into details, diapers at daycare, as well as their bathroom location (too far from classroom) are screwing us up.

Considering pulling her out for a bit if there's a good chance I could get her to "hold it" for 2 hours after one month of consistency at home. While, ofcourse, still paying for daycare 🙄🙄🙄 Needing to pee every 30m is annoying, also, they can't take her that frequently because of ratio.

Sophia Baker

I started at 2 with my son and he didn't start stretching to an hour until 2-3 months in. I suspect he is not fully emptying though. Also he drinks a ton of water

5 Tage

Antworten

Jennifer Hallman

5 Tage

.

Does anyone have any advice on "sharts"/pre-poop streaks? Here's some context: I've had my twins potty trained since they were 2. One of the twins had some poop problems in the beginning and even had a poop regression when we were 6 months into potty training. We did a protocol with Ashley Lomasney which helped him immensely and we've had no issues since.

Now he's 4 and over the past few months he's started having a lot of sharts and what I'd call pre-poop streaks where it's like he almost can't hold it in to get to the potty quick enough. At first it was just random and every so often. But now over the past few weeks it has been every poop, where he streaks and even the occasional small turd coming out in his undies first before he makes it to the bathroom. I've had to change and wash multiple pairs of underwear daily almost as though we're back in the early days of potty training. Worse part is he's started to take his undies off and try to throw them away when it's been happening too so he knows it's not ok to for that happen.

So I'm just trying to figure out what's going on or could be causing what is starting to feel like another regression(maybe that's also my own ptsd from the first poop regression haha).

Maura Paul

Any advice for what helped? We're just starting out and she's def sharting and having me wipes them too often which is leading to making her bum red. She's really afraid of going. Hope this gives you a bump to help you out!

5 Tage

Antworten

McKenna Gordon

5 Tage

Has anyone been able to take away nighttime diapers without waking them to pee during the night?

My little one (25 months) is dry during nap time 100% of the time so far and I would say had been waking up 90% of the time in the morning with a dry diaper. The only time he pees in the diaper is if I sleep in and don't catch it in time. And in that case as soon as I open his door in the morning he says "Mommy, I peed in my diaper". Can I just take them away without using pull-ups and maybe have some success if I'm making sure I'm up early to catch it when he wakes?

Sarah De Silva

Hi! My daughter was dry during naps so we just took a way the nap diaper and kept the nighttime diaper for a while longer.

Then, when she started staying dry at night we took the nighttime diaper away too. We didnt end up needing to do night wake ups, so it is possible!

But my biggest reccomendation is to be prepared that you may need to do a night wake up. If it were me, I would set an alarm for the morning so he can pee first thing. But if you start to notice accidents over night despite being prompt in the morning, you will need to do a nighttime waking. Definitely don't return to diapers once you take the nighttime diaper away.

So you may be able to avoid night waking given how dry he is staying, but be prepared to do them just in case.

5 Tage

Antworten

Faith Southerland

5 Tage

.

Looking for advice!

We started block 1 back in December (20 mo) and lasted a full day before the whole house came down with the flu. The one day we had did not go well at all. She understood the concept and wanted to go in the potty, but was SCARED. Crying, shaking, screaming scared the second that pee started to come out. We decided to stop and wait until we were healthy again to start.

This week is spring break for my oldest so it seemed like it would be the perfect time. She just turned 2 yesterday. Again, same result. Understands pee goes in the potty, ask for potty and tells me when she needs to go, but the only successful pee we've had she cried for the entire process. She didn't seem scared, just emotional this time around. It took her about 5 minutes to calm down and then she was proud of herself.

I guess I'm seeking others experiences and advice on how to get her to relax and not cry the whole time 😂 I've tried singing, books, tablet (last resort 🤪), legos, etc and she just doesn't care.

Rachel Donahue

• Folgen

5 Tage

.

This may be a long one, but I'm feeling so defeated...

My son is 2.5 and we started the Oh Crap method just over a week ago.

We did Block 1 until Thursday. The first couple days went okay (a few pees in the potty), day 3 had more resistance, but on Thursday he pooped in the potty so we moved to Block 2.

Friday (with Dad), it went really poorly. Lots of resistance and accidents. We moved the potty to the bathroom only, and that evening with me he successfully peed in the toilet multiple times with no issue.

Saturday went well, he either told me "potty" or showed signs and went in the bathroom. Only 2 accidents all day.

Sunday (with Dad again) was rough. Resistance and accidents all day.

Monday at daycare was a struggle. He refused to sit on the toilet with the insert, had accidents, and was very upset. She said maybe we stop? Lady, it's be ONE day for you.

At home, he's clearly recognizing when he needs to go (grabbing himself, saying "potty"), but often refuses to sit and gets upset.

I'm feeling stuck. He can do it and has shown success, but the resistance is really inconsistent, especially depending on the caregiver.

Would you:

- Go back to pants-less (Block 1)?
- Stay in Block 2 and keep guiding him?
- Or adjust approach somehow to reduce resistance?

Any advice or similar experiences would be so appreciated. 🙏

Breanna Larson

Does he like Ms. Rachel? My daughter was having a lot of resistance and was struggling more with Dad, too. The stress of that made me start stressing and pressuring her. I think me trying to be more casual made her resistant a little less but I truly think it was watching Ms. Rachel's potty training video (MULTIPLE times) that was what helped her get over her true resistance to go to the potty and actually pee while sitting down. She doesn't like the little potty, she always just wants the big potty. After about 5 days I was wondering if this was working or if we needed some sort of reset. I ended up doing a semi reset with just her and me at home with no pressure to go potty, no pants, and Ms. Rachel over and over. We're now almost two weeks in and she's doing a great job! If we ask if she needs to go potty, her initial response is "no" but if we can word it differently, she fights less and will walk with us to the bathroom. My husband can help her now (although she prefers me) and tonight she even told me she needed to poop twice and even after having her nighttime diaper on she said she needed to pee and then peed in the toilet instead of the diaper. It's a process and I was having some doubts but ultimately made the decision that we decided this was it so we're giving it our full effort. She's so proud when she's successful so we just needed to push through. You need to decide in your mind if you're committed to this or not. If you are then keep supporting him, if not then stop but don't let daycare dictate that. They need to be aware to watch him better to know his signals and should be willing to help support you in his potty training.

If you want to do this, then you've got this! Setbacks and accidents will happen but focus on the positive and encourage him and let him know how proud you are of him for learning something new and doing something hard.

5 Tage

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Joessa Stenerson

5 Tage

Hi all,

Any other kids in daycare? We started potty training on Saturday (3/28) and he did block 1 amazingly but Monday he had to go back to daycare so Sunday 3/29 we transitioned mid day to block 2. He did fairly well but yesterday at daycare he didn't have a single success.

Once we got home he immediately went pee on the potty. He's now been "refusing" since we got him home after his big pee yesterday. He is trying to hold it when he clearly has to go. He was so excited about it, and is now melting down about it.

I assume this is normal? Recommendations on proceeding without pushing to hard?

Maura Paul

Following because I just dropped mine at daycare this morning and she wet herself before I even left. We had a whole week of success.

5 Tage

Antworten

Maggie Cowles

6 Tage

.

Currently training my 26 month old. He's doing good during the day, but he is "holding it" for nap time and night time when he knows he'll get a diaper on. Any tricks? Thanks!

Valeria Elena Cavazos

All aboard this boat!

5 Tage

Antworten

Diana Ariza Trump

6 Tage

.

We started night training about 3 weeks ago. My toddler just turned 3 years old. Bed remains dry if we take him to the potty at 10:30 pm and 2 am . He also goes on his own between 6 and 7 am.

One night I missed the 2am alarm and in the morning I watched the recording and he went pee at 2:30 am so we decided to drop the second wake up at 2 am to see if he would maybe go on his own after tha but it did not happen again.

What can I do? setting an alarm at 2 am every night to get him is not a long term solution.

Thank you

Brittney Dee Bosh

We just waited until he was staying dry all night on his own before removing the night diapers. I was completely unwilling to ruin all our sleep over this. He started staying dry right before he turned 3, but all kids are different because it's hormonally driven, not a learned thing.

6 Tage

Antworten

Lynne Coulombe

6 Tage

Looking for some serious advice/tips/ tricks or anything helpful. We are on day 7 of potty training my 26month old daughter. She has self initiate poop in the potty every day since we started. She although, has not had any successful pees in the potty. She has no interest in self initiating and does not pee when I sit her down and ask her too even though she has shown all of her signs that she does have to. She will get off walk away and pee on the floor.

I have a theory that she may be doing it because she sees her older brother peeing standing up (although I can't be 100% sure that's the issue.

Please help! I am unsure how to proceed. There is a whole chapter on what to do if it happens with not wanting to poop but can't seem to find the answer with reverse and not willing to pee in the potty.

MagentaTurtle4028

Have you tried the way the book says to, aka wait until she starts to go (literally grab her midstream if necessary) then grab her an immediately "airlift" her to the potty?

4 Tage

Antworten

Mackenzie Hanson Albrecht

6 Tage

We're 6 weeks in and still averaging an accident per day, sometimes more. When does it improve??

Today my daughter has had 3 accidents. The best week we've had was 2 weeks ago when she had 4 or 5 accidents the whole week, and then it got worse again.

PassionateOctopus8500

Same except poop. Started in Jan and poops on the potty maybe 1/10 times. It's getting old lol

6 Tage

Antworten

Maura Paul

30. März um 14:41

My almost 30 month old daughter won't go with prompting. Will not sit when told. I don't push it but it would be a lot easier to do things out of the house if she did. We're only a week in and she's only had accidents the first couple days. Any advice or solidarity?

Jamie Lauer

Another idea to try: Have one of her toys prompt her. Have them act really interested in wanting to see how she goes potty because they want to learn too or something. It often helps us with my son, especially if we are in the middle of playing with the toy and he feels resistant to stopping to go potty.

P.S. If she's already self-initiating successfully after a few days, that's huge and awesome!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nichole Marie

30. März um 13:33

My sons been only pooping in nighttime diaper for a week now. He's had more than a handful of successful poops on the potty but some were paired with anxiety. The overnight poops are soft so I'm not concerned for constipation? I've been pushing water & fiber to assist with a daytime chance but we're having no luck. Any advice is welcomed.

Jenna Mary

This happened to us; my daughter got smart and realized she could just hold her poop until we put her sleep pull up on to avoid doing it on the potty. The only option was to night train which I'm actually really glad we did!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Vicky Coldicott

30. März um 08:11

I've been at potty training for 3 months now and this is second attempt. My daughter is really good at telling us about poo, but with wee she always does a little wee then she tells me shes done a wee. We have done heeaaps of bare bottom time at home and its always the same. She has very limited signals to show she needs the toilet so prompting is based on timing which only seems to go so far. She can hold for a really long time sometimes, and over prompting can cause issues. Tempted to do another reset - help!

Cathy Russell

How old is she?

After she has done a little wee does she then sit on the potty or toilet and do more?

It sounds like she is doing lots of positive things! My experience was that bare bottom lasted quite a while and we returned to it lots of times before self initiation or care factor kicked in 😊

1 Wo.

Antworten

Michelle Lucke

29. März um 21:54

.

I'm wondering whether it's a bad time to start or I'll be ok with time...

My son is 18 months old and changing his nappy is essentially like changing a chimpanzee. He screams, thrashes and carries on just about every nappy change. He hates me stopping what he is doing to change and he doesn't ever come to me with his own free will. He pulls at his nappy when he's done a poo so I can tell when he's dirty. I'm pregnant with my 2nd due in June so I did really want to get this potty training underway and I do think he's capable but wondered if others went from a crazy nappy changer to successful potty training at this age.

Anna Freeman

Advisor

For a child that young it can take up to 2 weeks just for block 1, and he will likely regress after baby is born do you may be better off waiting. Have you tried incorporating a special diaper change song? Standing up diaper changes?

6 Tage

Antworten

Natalie Thomas

29. März um 20:32

.

Hi! We are having some struggles and we are on day 9, block 2/3.

She doesn't give a fully clear signal and just freezes and starts going potty. She does better on when I prompt but still hard.

We have a dog and my 2 year old is very interested in peeing outside. She squats like a dog and pees very easily outside on our grass. I most always have our little potty outside when we are outside , but again she doesn't fully provide signal.

Also, we prompt to go pee, refuses and stays on the potty for 2 seconds and fights it. Then she will go into the living room and pee on the floor.

Wondering if anyone else is having these struggles?

Thank you! We are all learning together 😊

Caroline Crawdad

29. März um 20:32

.

Help please! We've been two weeks on block 1 with my 22 month old, naked during the day and using pull up only at nap time and bed time. She has gone from peeing and pooping everywhere without awareness to choosing to hold it for her nap/nighttime pull up. Now what?

McKenna Gordon

29. März um 20:24

.

Just transitioning to block 2 and I feel like I'm struggling to find the balance between not hounding/prompting our guy (25 months) too much that he resists going and then making him stop whatever he's doing to go and sit to pee when I know it's been long enough. I feel like I'm almost giving him TOO much space now and it's leading to accidents in his pants because he's not paying attention any more. How many times do we prompt them to go before making them try if they aren't initiating? How many accidents has to happen before I just need to go back to block 1 for a day?

Kari Ayala

29. März um 18:10

.

FTM.

I'm a single mom of 25-month-old twin girls. Potty training has been exhausting. One twin seems to be getting it and has had a few accidents. The other twin, has been resisting saying no and crying. I'm trying so hard not to lose it 🤔. Any tips for the resisting twin will be greatly appreciated!

Lisa Hanlon

If you can get her to sit on the potty try putting her feet in a tub of warm water. It will relax her enough to release a pee. Then lots of praise when she does it. Worked for my toddler then it just sorta clicked "oh that's what you want me to do". Blowing bubbles helped too

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kate Jarrett Furstenau

29. März um 18:06

We have an almost 3 year old (this June) who is, as the book would describe, a camel. He can really really hold it, which is nice for when he IS trained but makes it hard because it really stretches out when he has to go and causes us to inevitably over prompt. He will occasionally tell us on his own he has to go, but otherwise he really needs to be promoted every time. And it's a bit of a battle - he knows he has to go, he knows pee goes in the potty, but he just does not want to use it. He doesn't seem afraid, honestly he just probably doesn't find it fun and doesn't like being told what to do (strong willed).

Curious for anyone who was / is in same boat - when does the switch happen? When or how can we encourage him to go on his own and not be told? I feel like we are RIGHT there.

Lauren Waller

I've been "potty training" for over 3 months because my son can really hold it when he wants to. Thankfully I think we've gotten past the "see how long I can hold it" stage but we're still not making much progress. A lot of that is on me and our challenging schedule (it's really not possible to give it more than a dedicated day right now) but thankfully we've got time (he's 20m).

All that to say I feel you. I couldn't find much on camels when I thought we might have one. I think Jackie says when you actually have a camel, you need to do night, nap, and day training all at once.

6 Tage

Antworten

Tara Allen

29. März um 16:18

Day 4 of block 1 with my almost 28 month old daughter. Days 1 and 2 were promising, she did a big poo and pee in her toilet with prompting. We stayed in block 1 because still a ton of accidents on the floor (more accidents than success by a landslide). Day 3 and now day 4 I've been trying to back off, only prompting her when I see her sign that she's about to pee. When I prompt her she refuses, she will scream or say no and then pee on herself. Sometimes she will let me set her on her potty (nothing comes out). We seem to be hitting some resistance & may need to stay in block 1 for a few more days I am thinking.

Just looking for some words of advice or success stories if you've dealt with this! We're gonna push through because I know she's capable, she's shown it! 😊

Kendra Bain

You don't need to stay on block 1 if she has peed and pooped on the potty. The book says that as long as they can do it with prompting or without, you are ready for block 2.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Cady Womack

29. März um 16:16

Just started potty training yesterday so still in block 1 but I noticed my son is drinking way less almost like he knows and doesn't want to pee as much. He's peeing significantly less than I expected him too as well compared to diaper changes. I'm having to remind him often to drink water or milk. Has anyone else experienced this? I'm concerned that once he starts drinking his normal amount again that any potential progress we have will be tanked and we'll have to start over.

Nyssa Achtyes

We experienced this for the first day or two. I think we made too big of a deal out of the potty, and it made him nervous. So he didn't drink much and held his pee until his nap or until his bedtime when he had a pull up on. Day 3 we gave him juice mixed with water and he drank more and finally had some pee on the floor, which we wanted so we could actually teach him what to do. Once he released once or twice in the potty, he was less scared of peeing while bottomless, and went back to drinking and peeing a normal amount.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lauren Walker

29. März um 14:08

Does anyone have any advice for the “boy who cried pee?” Our 22 month old is doing well but half of his “pee!” alerts are false alarms. After sitting on the toilet, he smiles and says, “No.” It’s driving me nuts.

VioletOctopus9113

Our son's got a lot better once the novelty wore off. When we started he was constantly saying he had to pee. Now he only tells us when he actually has to go. (for the most part) He'll do this with poop the odd time still, but I think it's either not ready, or he's stalling if we're already in there.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kirsty Weatherspoon

• Folgen

29. März um 08:54

Day 2 child is definitely ready and this is all behaviour as refusing the sit on toilet etc. Currently on 12 hours no pee as hes dry overnight and wont sit on potty. He is not coping great with this and crying and loads of push back. My first 2 never did this and loved the method.

HOWEVER. Our other two kids are spewing and diarrhoea and im wondering if we need to just stop and restart

Help please

Candice Orm Gunderson

My kiddo started refusing day two. I ended up putting him in the bathroom with the potty alone and let him do his thing. It helped. I did also put a baby monitor in the bathroom (weird....but how do you trust a 24 month old in there lol)

1 Wo.

Antworten

Olivia Furer

29. März um 06:21

Does anyone have an older kid who took a really long time to night train? My daughter turns 6 in July and has zero desire to be done with overnight diapers. She's content to use it when she's laying bed waiting to fall asleep, instead of getting up to go. Of course, we encourage her to pee before bed and sometimes she does, other times she doesn't, but I just can't understand why she still pees in a diaper intentionally in bed. She's SUPER smart and strong willed and we know it's a control thing. We've tried taking the diapers away overnight for stretches of time, and she'll have maybe a few dry nights, but usually wets the bed when she's not wearing one. I've talked to her doctor about it because she also has a tendency to withhold a lot during the day (and always has). She'll make it very obvious when she has to go, but just doesn't want to. We regularly have to tell her (sometimes almost force her) to go when she's holding it.

Anyways, just looking for solidarity, or maybe advice if anyone has it? I just can't believe I have an almost 6 year old that still wears diapers at night. I just want to be done with them.

Morgan Gayle

Try no undies, just a nightgown. No water 2 hrs before bed. Pee last minute before closing eyes to sleep

3 Tage

Antworten

Amber Spencer

28. März um 23:34

How do you know when your kid is ready for block 2, just curious?

Candice Orm Gunderson

My kiddo pees and poops when we ask. He pees every time he sits down on the potty but doesn't initiate yet.... This is confusing.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nicole Gamache

28. März um 22:04

If your child slept through wet sheets/pants for night training — what did you do?

When you night trained, did your child just sleep through wet sheets/pants? Or did it wake them up? Any advice welcome!

Emily Warila

my son slept right through, he would flood the bed every night. We finally decided to take a break and do pull ups at night.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lars

28. März um 21:53

Help please... 26 month old, we started this 10 weeks ago.

I feel like we have hit a wall. He doesn't care if he's wet. Like he will pee his pants and his keep playing. Or pee on the floor and move along. He poops in his pants at daycare during or after naps.

He tells us AFTER he pees his pants, but never has unprompted taken himself to the potty or told us he needs to go. He also sometimes withholds poop which makes him constipated at times. We give him plenty of fiber and liquids.

He can go a couple days without an accident if we prompt him to go/ or take him frequently.

When will it click? How long before he goes from "I peed," to "I am peeing," to "I need to pee?" Any tips with that, or with the withholding poop part?

Feeling pretty discouraged.

Jillian Marguerite

This is a plateau, not failure. He's relying on you to prompt instead of taking ownership. Pull back on prompting a bit and get back to watching him closely so he can start recognizing "I'm peeing" before it happens. When he starts, calmly move him to the potty mid pee. That's how the learning clicks.

For poop withholding, don't push or pressure. Keep poop soft with fluids and fiber, watch for his cues, and get him to the potty as soon as you see them. Some kids need more support with poop and that's normal. Also - we offer one small sugar free candy after dinner and that helps him not withhold poop but that's a personal choice.

He can do it, he's already shown that. Now it's about shifting from you managing it to him noticing his body. Stay consistent.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Ainsley Renee Mayersky

28. März um 20:38

Temporarily re-diapering while working through block 1?

On day 8 of block 1 with my 19mo old. Things are going okay but it's a very slow process and we are definitely NOT ready to move to block 2. But I'm wondering if there is harm in rediapering her for an hour or two once a week? I don't want to keep missing church, especially Resurrection Sunday next week.

Is this going to set back all our hard work? We haven't made much progress and it's been a challenging 8 days. But I'm also going to lose my mind if I keep being a shut in 😅

Kirsty Weatherspoon

I honestly believe from experience that if you cant leavr block 1 b4 day 8 your child isnt ready or you should just use pull ups for specific situs

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kirsty Weatherspoon

• Folgen

28. März um 18:32

How are people toilet training with a 5 and 6 year old at home..

Its been chaos... they arent used to staying at home and are exhausted and struggling.

I do trust this method though. 3rd time using it and he did manage two pees in potty.

AmbitiousSalamander618

You couldn't have started while the older children were in school? I think it can be unfair on the older siblings but 3 days is doable, is your partner husband wife around and able to take the others out and about for a few hours even after work break up the day?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Craig

28. März um 12:47

Hi! So we're in the commando block currently and overall he does very well. I think I was in the habit of over-prompting, which was causing resistance so I've cut back on that. Before starting the methods in this book, I was heavy with bribes (mainly chocolate chips or something similar) and it worked until it didn't, hence wanting to try this.

I generally ask him before we leave and when we arrive if he has to go and if it's been a while, I'll ask him to try. Sometimes he really doesn't want to try even though he hasn't gone in a long time and he grabs himself as though he needs to go (and occasionally if it's right before nap time, I'll put his pull up on and he'll pure very shortly after that) I'm not sure what to do in these scenarios because it definitely leads to a power struggle. Help please!

And then my second scenario is something that happened today and I want to know what to do in the future. Before we left the gym, I asked him if he had to go potty, he said no, didn't want to try, etc. We get in the car and start driving- he says he has to pee. So I pull into a space and we go into the grocery store to the bathroom and he says he doesn't have to go and that he wants to go when we get to the play place. Chances were pretty good he did because it has been a couple hours and it was another 20 minutes to the play place so I didn't want to risk it..... so I reverted and told him he could have a cookie if he goes because Publix gives free cookies. He agreed and when he peed, whew it was a lot and I was glad I didn't risk it 😊. But I'm not sure how to better handle it in the future or if I should just cave in those instances.

He's 2.5 for reference if that is relevant.

Emily Collins Nielsen

One thing that helped my son was saying, "it's time for a potty break" or "we need to go potty before we get in the car" rather than asking if he needed to go. I even started singing a little jingle (singing "potty break" to the tune of the "lollipop" song) which usually got him into fun mode rather than grumpy mode. Other times it helped to say, 'we can go back to X activity after a potty break" or "I can see you're grabbing yourself. That means we need a potty break". Other times, especially in public restrooms, it helps if I say, "Mommy needs to go potty too. Do you want to go first, or do you want Mommy to go first?"

He's probably just discovering his "no" is very powerful, but there are times he really can't or shouldn't say no, so I don't give him that chance.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Gina Dongas

28. März um 12:05

Block 1 goes so well but after trying block 2 she pees in her pants. We had changed 3 pants in the first hour. Now I'm on the third day and pretty anxious to try block 2 again. On Monday o go back to work and she goes to daycare. Any advice would be appreciated! Should I stay in block 1 (even though block 1 has been successful) or should I ride it out in block 2?

Emma Sebby

I'm with you. My little guy is the same. And then he only tells me after the pants are wet "mama wet" 🙄 no clue what to do except for be consistent

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kirsty Weatherspoon

▪ Folgen

28. März um 07:33

.

3rd time using this method. 3rd child

27 months absolutely capable and ready.

Within the first 2 mins. Throwing the potty saying no and has been crying on the ground for 10 mins demanding trouser?!

Help

Jessica Crockett Marquis

My daughter didn't enjoy being naked, so I bought her an oversized t-shirt that would hang down past her bottom and that solved the problem for us.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Emma Sebby

28. März um 04:02

.

Am I doing something wrong if my 23.5 mo is doing great only when I set timers and prompt him every 45 mins all day? 🤔 tried to move to Block 2 after 4 days of Block 1 but he literally doesn't self initiate pee. Normal? We just finished day 5 and he self initiates poop (amazing), but he's only successful with pee when I make him go at least every hour. He's very happy to sit when I tell him to but he pees everywhere if I don't remind him. How long do I expect this part to take 🤔

Kristin Strong

Self initiation took forever for us... like well after turning 2

1 Wo.

Antworten

Erica Purcell

28. März um 03:22

Day 13 of potty training my 21 month old. She pees and poops on the potty. Only problem is if I'm not there to prompt pulling her pants down, she will pee through her pants. Anyone else gone through or going through this right now?

Erica Purcell

Verfasser/in

She does dress herself already. I'm thinking adding underwear before the suggested timeframe might help because it's tighter, but also don't want to have it cause a regression?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Stefanie Joy

28. März um 02:21

Hi! Are there any potty books for kids that explain not to pee in pants? I feel like all the ones we have found just introduce the potty and getting rid of diaper, etc.

Alicia Jackson

The Lovevery ones are great

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kristin Straub

28. März um 01:37

My son is 29 months and I consider him fully trained except if I can't get him to pee regularly he won't self initiate... and will pee his pants. We started potty training at 25 months and he's been doing great. He self initiates pooping on the potty and most of the time he'll pee when we tell him to try every hour or so or before car rides etc. Recently he's becoming stubborn with not wanting to be told what to do, wants to do things himself, etc. just typical challenging 2.5 year old behavior. And now it's interfering with his potty use. I will ask him to try and pee and he won't, I'll ask him again 20 minutes later, again nope. I try and work it into switching tasks, if you want to play playdoh we have to go potty first. Nope, he'll run off and occupy himself elsewhere. I try not to play into the power struggle but at some point he will have an accident and I'm starting to get really frustrated. Help!

LavenderChipmunk6129

We ran into this for weeks - the power struggles got worse and he peed on the ground on purpose to show he had the power. It was horrible. We just recently overcame it (past 3 weeks have been successful) and this is what worked:

- time

- "giving up" where I just stopped trying and if there were messes, I cleaned them up and acted very neutral about the whole thing (which I know sounds insane if your child is peeing on floor on purpose but ANY reaction positive or negative gives them the idea this is so important to you and they can hold it over your head when it's power play)

- inviting him to watch me pee and making it really fun by having his number one motivator (stuffed animals and books and time with parents) participate. Having his stuffed animals pee and cheer, letting them watch me pee, being extremely silly about all of this, etc while NOT prompting him to go all revitalized his enjoyment of potty

- try to make the benefit HIS and not yours at all. From now on you DGAF if he goes on floor or the potty. If he goes on potty, you say "thanks for using potty!" And that's it.

When we were struggling with potty power stuff I legit think it hurt our relationship temporarily, like he thought his identity was rooted in whether or not he used the potty and that made him mad. Once I took off the pressure, it took time to repair that. I even resorted to pull ups for a week and left potty out. Called them underwear. That actually helped him see I gave up and he started using it. Then we ditched those bc he started treating them like diapers. Now he uses it independently and there's no power plays, but we do prompt

"What's that Elmo? You want to see him pee AGAIN?! Elmo you are so silly. X can you show him????"

"Will you go to bathroom with me? I get lonely!"

"Oohhhh I have a new book I wanna read you on potty. Wanna see???"

1 Wo.

Antworten

Melanie Cody

28. März um 01:25

2 1/2 year old daughter on day 3 of block 1 going bottomless. Goes potty on the potty with prompts. Absolutely zero pee accidents. Refuses to poop on the potty. Has had 2 poop accidents over these 3 days. She is really upset about the idea of pooping on the toilet, I assume due to control and likely lacking confidence with it being something new. We have tried songs, books, giving privacy and standing outside the bathroom door, role play with her stuffed animals and dolls, and blowing bubbles. Since she is doing well with potty, do we move to block 2 or do we stay on block 1 until she has had a successful poop in the potty?

Valeria Elena Cavazos

I'm experiencing the same thing. Stayed in block 1 for 5 days and moved to block 2 yesterday. Still no pooping- only while sleeping- but everything else is great. No pee accidents

1 Wo.

Antworten

Goli Tsak

28. März um 00:41

Our 3 year old (as of January) has been fully potty trained as of about 2-3 weeks. We put him in a night diaper because he isn't dry in the mornings, but since being fully trained his sleep has been horrific. He dropped his last nap well before 3, but now wakes 1-4 times a night screaming. We're pretty sure the sensation of needing to pee is causing night terrors.

Any advice??

TrustworthyPoodle3110

I think potty training caused a sleep regression that lasted a few weeks for my daughter at 20-21 months, she's just now coming out of it. I'm not sure if this could be the case for you since he is much older but just sharing my experience

1 Wo.

Antworten

Thais Mathias Dunn

27. März um 23:17

Starting with my 2.5 year old boy and he absolutely HATES being butt naked. The boy is angry. He keeps asking his pants..

He also seems to prefer the toilet to the potty, should I skip the little potty altogether?

Suggestions?

AmbitiousSalamander618

If he prefers the toilet yes skip the potty. If he hates being naked don't force him toilet training to suit him as an individual

1 Wo.

Antworten

Monica Parker

27. März um 22:40

.

Jenn Levi ist mit Local R.E. hier: Welden Village.

27. März um 22:27

.

 1774 Welden Village Ave. Kernersville, NC

Come see this nearly new townhouse just 1 block from the resort-style pool in person this weekend! ... Mehr anzeigen

Kommentare für diesen Beitrag wurden automatisch deaktiviert.

Alexa Marie

27. März um 22:30

.

Been potty training for about 2 months now with my daughter who is 31 months. We've had some setbacks but overall pee makes it in the potty about 95% of the time these days which is GREAT! Where we are having issues is with pooping. She hardly ever makes it in the potty and when she doesn't she doesn't even seem to care. Just carries on playing and often doesn't even tell us. I'm at a loss and tired of cleaning underwear. HELP 🤔

MagentaTurtle4028

Have you tried going back to bare bottom or commando for a few days to help regain confidence ?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Danna

27. März um 22:27

Regression after new sibling- how long does it last?

Any tips?

I'm drowning in 🍌 over here 😞

Miriam Ferko

My son didn't have accidents but he did start to resist prompting and hold it - i think it lasted about 2 months. Then one day he was just handling it 100% independently again 🧑🏻 this was between 3 and 3.5, trained since 20 months

1 Wo.

Antworten

Bearbeitet

Katie Metz

27. März um 22:25

.

Night training!

My 3 year old has been daytime trained since 22 months but is nowhere near “ready” to be diaper free overnight... still pees during most naps. Wakes up with a FULL diaper every morning.

We have another baby arriving any day now but I’m wondering if I need to be doing anything to prepare for night training my first kiddo, as the book recommends doing so before 3.5 y/36 months old??

Katie G Brogan

Overnights is really hormonal. If they're not waking up dry they're not ready. My freshly turned 4yo has been day trained since 26 mos. She doesn't need a pull up during nap but overnight she still does. I'm not concerned. She'll be ready someday but I'm not doing anything overnight until she is

1 Wo.

Antworten

Bree Paden

27. März um 21:52

.

Another accident. 2 accidents since he woke from his nap 80 minutes ago. He just sat there starring at the pee coming out. Made no attempt to move. I'm losing it. He's naked, toddler potty is out. I feel like the last 70 days have been for nothing. I can't take my eyes off him for more than 20 minutes. I have more pee on my floor two months later than I did the first eek of training.

Yet yesterday he held it for 2.5 hours and 100% went to the bathroom by himself. Pulling pants down and everything.

Anonymoose8123

My daughter had this set back. I Went back to putting her on the potty every hr and told her when she showed she could do it herself then I wouldn't make her sit every hr. After a few days of every hour I let her take the lead and she was back to being dry all day.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Chrystal Coulton

27. März um 18:49

.

Anyone have a favorite books to read to baby that show potty or the character learning to potty?

Melissa Nicholson

Potty by Leslie Patricelli. The "Undies!" page was my son's why for potty training.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Staci Meyer

27. März um 16:38

I started potty training my son just before 2. We did a reset after about 8 weeks in and here we are a year later and still have accidents pretty much on a daily basis. He's just shy of 3 now. He doesn't usually tell me he has to go but he will go if I put him on the potty every hour or two. But still. Accidents almost daily. Should I just go back to diapers and let him tell me when he's ready to try again?

Jill Jarvis

Try a couple days at home bottomless?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lynne Coulombe

27. März um 16:31

Hello! I am on day 3 of potty training my daughter. She 2.2 yrs old. She had self initiated poop in the potty twice, although has no interest with peeing in the potty, when I catch her peeing on the floor and put her on the potty she will stop and wait 5-10min and do it again on the floor. When I put her on for pee, she also screams no and doesn't want to stay sitting on it. We are still phase one so no clothes from waist down.

Does any one have any advice for this?

TIA

Nicole Gamache

27. März um 04:24

TLDR; About to start poop and night training - extra advice? Anyone else master poop well after pee? How long did it take?

My son is 3.5. We potty trained him right at 24 months (while I was 35 weeks pregnant), but he saved his poops for nap and bedtime (does it within 10 minutes of going down) and still does.

We are going to tackle poop and night time starting this weekend but I'm a bit nervous about how it's going to go down. Just reread the poop chapter.

Here's some background and what we already do:

- we believe he is slightly on the spectrum (still need to get assessed), not sure if affects anything?
- I have him sit down on potty right before nap and bed and tell him to try and poop, no pressure if he doesn't
- will leave him alone in the bathroom to give him privacy
- have told him "try to toot in the potty" or "try to push out a poop" and make grunting noise. He will do the noise but nothing
- he knows all about poop, and I let him come in the bathroom with me
- can verbalize "need to go pee pee" but speech is delayed enough where he can't explain why he doesn't want to poop in the potty
- does not like the feeling of poop in diaper, wants it off immediately when he wakes up from nap
- we typically change his diaper at 10:00pm if he's pooped so he's not in it all night - we will replace this with the mid-night potty sitting
- has pooped once/twice a day at specific times before nap/bedtime for over two years. Started by giving him alone time in his playpen as a baby.
- eats lots of fruits and veggies

Anyone else experience this? What did you do?

And how long were you waking little one up to use the potty during the night? Days, weeks, months?

Jessica Crockett Marquis

My daughter was pee-trained for over 6 months before I was finally able to get her to poop in the potty. She would come ask me for a pull-up each night so that she could poop, she never asked at daycare. Sadly, I obliged because I was lazy and didn't want the mess. After she was accepted into preschool, I knew we had to master pooping so I just wouldn't give her a pull-up when she asked. She started withholding and her pediatrician told me to give her MiraLAX each day to help. That did the trick, the MiraLAX made it soft enough that she couldn't hold it in. But she wouldn't immediately go poop, she would run around screaming/crying and holding her bottom until she realized that if she went in the potty, her tummy would feel better. After 3 weeks, she's finally fully potty trained.

We got extremely lucky with night training as we never had to do it. She pees before bed, sleeps all night, and wakes up dry. I was a bed wetter until 11, so I was fully prepared for it to be awhile for her too.

Wishing you luck on this journey. Give yourself both grace and realize it's trial and error. He'll get it!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Megan Douglas

27. März um 02:21

How do you get over procrastinating potty training?

Baby #2 is due end of June, so we wanted to start potty training to try easing the load a bit, but I keep putting it off because of future things we have planned 😓

Cassandra Morgan

Just go for it! Not a popular thing I'm about to say because it goes against the philosophy of the book, but once you get started, if you have a big thing planned, don't be afraid to use your instinct to adapt. I was terrified of using pull ups because it's "not allowed" but I finally gave myself permission to do what I needed to do for my own sanity and honestly, for us, I don't believe it slowed down our progress. I didn't always use pull ups, but if we were going somewhere where I just knew it was going to be a disaster, I did. I treated them as underwear so we still tried to use the potty. I learned that if I felt anxious, then my son could feel that energy so this way, we were both more relaxed and it usually went well! We did spend a solid week at home.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Shelley Burkett

27. März um 01:29

We are half way week three of potty training.

At home, he's pretty successful. 1-2 accidents a day (if he's home all day). He will sometimes self initiate. He's agreeable to trying when I prompt him.

Daycare is another story. He's halfway through week two at daycare, and he has only successfully peed on the potty about 4 times. Most days he doesn't pee on the potty at all and only has accidents. They take him to the potty about every thirty minutes and he will say "all done", stand up and a couple minutes later have an accident.

How do I bridge the gap between his success at home and at school?

Nyssa Achtyes

Following because we're about to be in this spot too

1 Wo.

Antworten

Alex Wilson

27. März um 01:10

My daughter has been potty trained for a year.

She turns 3 on 3/28.

Lately, shes been not wearing a diaper/dry after her 2 to 3 hour naps but she still wears a diaper at night and wakes up wet.

Is this a sign she will start staying dry at night soon?

Jeanna Hendrickson

27. März um 00:20

So we got potty trained in 2 weeks. I really have no complaints. Other than did anyone not do night training? This guy sleeps in the same room as my other 2 and he really fights going potty in the middle of the night. Not sure if it's really worth it to me. Just curious.

Jeanna Hendrickson hat die Kommentarfunktion für diesen Beitrag deaktiviert.

Sarah Goodwin

I didn't do night training specifically. I just tracked her night diapers and when she went a month with no wetness we put undies on her

1 Wo.

Kelly Malec

26. März um 21:31

Resistance and regression help please!

We started training at Christmas time. She eventually got the hang of it and was indicating to us when she had to go pee or poo ever since. About 3-4 weeks ago she started having accidents. Multiple accidents a day. And, around this same time she also started seriously resisting our suggestions to go potty. Now we are stuck in this pattern. Sometimes she'll initiate (or listen) and go. Other times she has a bunch of accidents, even after prompting. We moved into a new house about a 5 weeks ago and she was fine here the first two weeks or so and now this has started. Could it be related? Any insights as to how to deal with the backslide? She's now 29 months old.

Claire McMillan Tippet

Commenting to follow because I am having the exact same issue, minus the house move

1 Wo.

Antworten

Elizabeth Chichester

26. März um 21:26

I'm 2 weeks into training my 23 month old daughter and shes doing great with pee, signaling and releasing well. Poo has been harder. She will signal she needs to go but just can't release on the potty. I've tried our little potty, big potty with kids insert and even rsc. She just can't seem to release and gets upset. Then we'll be playing and she'll have a bit slip out and rush to the potty. This will repeat until she finally has a complete poo That isn't on the potty. We have been using stool softener because she does have history of painful stooling when she was about 15 months old and we had to use a MiraLAX program for 2 weeks to get her back to normal stooling.

Question is if this is just part of the process or should I be worried and seeking more advice?

Any advice or suggestions to help her?

Emma Sebbby

It's definitely normal. we're only on day 4 but what's helping my 23 mo is giving him complete privacy. I set him up on the potty (maybe even with a snack or a car or something) and make an excuse to leave and he actually goes! If I linger he pops up every 5 seconds and fights me. It may be worth a try? I have to be SUPER quiet so he focuses and just pretend I don't exist 😊

1 Wo.

Antworten

Chassidy Howard

26. März um 15:24

We're like a month into potty training. I don't really know what block we're in lol. She kinda goes pantless a lot at home while I'm trying to get her sister to sleep because she can't push down all her pants. She can do a couple that are very loose. She wears underwear in public and is doing good with initiating.

Now for the actual question... we're only wiping poops... she's very red. Should I be wiping every pee...?

She's kinda going through this thing where she'll do multiple pees back to back bc she's obsessed with washing her hands and she knows we wash her hands everytime she pees. So she pees quite often at times.

Soo wipe every time or? And how lol

TrustworthyPoodle3110

I just dab my daughter with some toilet paper after each pee, just a quick wipe to make sure she's dry

1 Wo.

Antworten

Julie Ann Powell

26. März um 14:10

Currently potty training my son who is too he will be two and a half in May and he's been sick with the flu like three times during the winter so potty training has been a stop and go process but we are finally back in it and have had three days of successful non-stop potting on the potty and he's only had like three or four accidents a day which is pretty good for him so I'm pretty proud of him and he's been dry for the most part in underwear it's when I put a disposable back on him is whenever he uses the potty and it now potty training is not the issue going on it is not the issue the only main issue that I'm struggling with is getting him to communicate when he's got to use the bathroom most of the time I've basically just been putting him on every 30 minutes to an hour specifically before going to sleep after sleep before and after meals but I cannot seem to get him to communicate when he's got to go pee or poop and he thinks he is water so that makes it a little bit difficult for me to know if he's going pee too because he could honestly be saying water as it I got to pee or water as in I want to drink so I'm not sure how to go about to get him to communicate I've kind of just been winging it with oh you peed at this time we'll go again at this time and he pretty much goes every time I put him on just lacking the communication

Melissa Collins

26. März um 12:44

I need help, my son is regressing i think.

Ok started potty training about 2 months ago and hes honestly been doing so good with it. But this past week he keeps peeing in his pants. He specifically does this when his dad gets home from work. I think he is doing it to get a reaction from my fiancé. The first few times hes done it we would get him cleaned up and changed. Now he will get a time out for doing it because he keeps doing i... Mehr anzeigen

Meredith Smethie

Take his pants off when his dad gets home?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Jessica Taylor

26. März um 11:10

Going backwards 🙄

My daughter (2.5) caught on very quickly and was self initiating, telling us she needed to go and very few accidents by days 2 and 3. After about a week she seemed to have decided it wasnt for her and just started having more and more accidents... she was back at daycare so we couldnt have her bare bum, but she was going commando and then bare bum in the evenings and weekends.

Im at a loss. Im fairly sure she knows the feeling and knows what to do. She just doesn't seem bothered? At first she would get upset when she had accidents but now a few weeks along shes not upset by sitting in wet pants at all. She still goes and self initiates poos and wees sometimes, but its mostly prompted or an accident.

Ive moved to taking her every hour, which reduces accidents but has taken the ownership and responsibility away from her. Its week 4 and shes had zero progress since it all turned to 🤡 after the first week.

What can I do? Just go back and start from the beginning this long weekend maybe?

DeterminedPineapple6906

We had a bit of that after about a month. We just kept doing it consistently and he eventually came around. I think progress isn't linear so it's normal to have some setbacks. You can try going back to the beginning and see if that helps. We would go back to commando after a few accidents at home. Focusing on describing dry pants/wet pants helped. I just said "look, your pants are dry!" Or "uh oh, your pants are wet"

1 Wo.

Antworten

Cinthia Correa

26. März um 03:05

I used the 3-day potty training method with my son when he was 28 months and it worked like magic, he was fully trained in 3 days. He's 5 now, and I'm about to start with my 34-month-old daughter.

I really don't want to reread the whole book 😂 so can anyone give me the CliffsNotes version?

Daycare actually tried training her about 2 weeks ago, but it didn't click. She would ask to go potty, sit there, and do nothing... then hop off and pee like 5 minutes later. They tried for about a week and she just wasn't getting it.

Now I'm a little nervous to start 😬

Any tips, advice, or "this is what finally worked" stories would be so appreciated! 🙏💛

Mackenzie Hanson Albrecht

26. März um 00:44

We're 5 weeks in. Starting this week every time my daughter (22 months) doesn't get her way, she cries and pees her pants. Any tips??

Gittel Dissen

My daughter did this too when she was emotional or upset, it does get better. My daughter would also hold it for long periods so I think she really prob just needed to pee and couldn't hold when she got that way.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Rachel Nelson

25. März um 23:32

I'm struggling to get my daughter (20m) to sit on the potty initially. She's been doing good with peeing about ever hour when I prompt her, but when we go into the bathroom she refuses to sit on the potty. Once she starts peeing while standing, I can move her to the potty and she'll sit and finish going. I've tried singing, counting, reading books and she doesn't care for any of it. Has anyone else struggled with this?

Mackenzie Hanson Albrecht

Maybe she wants the potty somewhere other than in the bathroom, like the living room? Or she might feel like you're over prompting.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Marcie Taylor

25. März um 21:40

.

Overnight Training

My daughter is 3.5yo. We started a few months after she turned 2. She was day trained after about a week with the occasional accident we had a few regressions but overall great now for months.

We do not night train, as we just were not comfortable waking her up as she has always been a difficult sleeper.

Mehr anzeigen

Whitney Langford

25. März um 21:04

.

We potty trained at 23 months and now he is 25 months. He's doing great! No poop accidents. We've struggled recently with some pee accidents at home (specifically when playing) so I've been prompting more and setting a timer. We are traveling right now for my sister in laws wedding and we used a pull up on the plane during travel. On our first day here he struggled and was peeing his pants. We are on day 2 and back to more of our consistent routine (napping at normal time, eating, etc) and he's doing better. I will probably need to put a pull up on him because he's the ring bearer and in the wedding on Saturday. My main questions are: will all of this set him back while traveling? Do I just try to remain consistent? Any advice through this? We've worked so hard and I mainly feel bad for him because it's probably confusing now to wear a pull up for "certain" times during this trip. My mom guilt is struggling with all of this!

Lara Wadsworth

I would do anything you possibly can NOT to have him in any kind of diaper or pull up. Set timers, take him every 30 minutes if you need to or whatever but putting him back in a pull up will cause a regression (as it seems like you've already seen)

1 Wo.

Antworten

Elissa Cee

25. März um 19:27

I am ready to potty train my 2 year old (24.5mo) within the next couple weeks. I also have a 7.5month old abd my 2 year old goes to daycare... I know daycare will be a challenge as she will likely need to wear a pull up (and they dont think kids are ready until 2.5 years old)... I plan to change her into the pull up when we get there and take it off before going home as I read in the book. I also plan to have someone else watch my youngest during day 1 and then have my husband mostly watch the youngest during days 2, 3 & 4... and I can keep my 2 year old home from daycare for a week or so..

Has anyone trained their older kiddo in a similar position? Any tips?

I am nervous because of daycare but also my youngest isn't sleeping through the night yet 🥲

Julia Brown

We started 3 months ago, at 22 months. We didn't even try to get the daycare to do undies until we had mostly mastered being dry at home first (which, for the record, took several weeks, not just a few days at home, we did the at-home thing but she definitely was not potty trained after just those 4-5 days). For the past month or so she's been going to daycare in undies with a diaper over them. We've been given the green light from daycare to try just undies next week because she hasn't had accidents and has been doing well with asking to go to the potty. So, contrary to the book, having the diapers still around has not really been a problem (for us at least). I just talked to my daughter and explained that, even though she was wearing a diaper, she still needed to ask to go to the potty. I repeat this every morning when I put the diaper on over her underwear. She gets it. The only real tip I have is to be patient and not expect it to be a short one-and-done thing - you set yourself up for disappointment, and you add pressure that perversely makes it take longer.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Bailey Hickey

25. März um 18:36

.

My daughter (30 months) does well bottomless. She doesn't say when she needs to potty or poop she just goes and does it. How in the heck do I get that to transition into anything on the bottom? I haven't noticed any signs that she has to go besides her heading to the potty chair. She obviously knows when she has to go but the moment she has anything covering her bottom she doesn't care. Even being in wet shorts doesn't bother her so she doesn't fully understand or care that she had an accident. Anyone have any tips?

Heather McAnear Sloan

Same happened to us. We hung out in commando with thin PJ pants. He would at least realize that and have a reaction. Also a sticker chart.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lea Yanome

25. März um 18:06

.

I potty trained my daughter at about 17 months and she has been dry overnight since, and wakes us up if she has to go potty. At what point do I toss the diaper overnight too? She's been dry for three months so I assume we're good but I'm nervous because she's so little!

Alida H

Whenever ypu feel comfortable or the diaper is feeling like more of a hassle. I feel you though, we were in the same position and I waited a good few months. We stopped around 18 months from memory.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Stephanie Bianchi

25. März um 16:52

21 month old stalling out? We spent 20 days in block one. Now currently on day 14 of block two and it feels like we've lost the consistency? Some days are great and only 0-2 pee accidents. We're promoting for transitions/ roughly every hour. The last week we've hit an issue with resisting naps, crying at bedtime, crying when we take her diaper off in the morning, ignoring prompts all together, or sitting on the potty and then having accidents a few min later. She can say it and sign it. She usually listens to prompting but still needs help with her pants. She was self initiating about 1-2 time a day before but now nothing. When she does have an accident it's a full puddle without warning and she just stands there frozen in place. ChatGPT says keep going but I'm tired. Is this just a little phase/regression? We've hardly had any outings in the last month, maybe one a week and it's just exhausting me (36 weeks pregnant) at this point now having to be so vigilant again.

Darine Flanagan

No advice, but im having similar with my 2 year old and feel like im running out of patience 🙄 sending solidarity!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Mary Janko

25. März um 16:18

Is it normal for toddler to say they have to poop and then sit on the potty for 30+ minutes and do we just let them??
He pees on potty consistently but having trouble with poop.

We do not do screen time but he does have special "potty books" he likes to read?

Thanks in advance for being such a great resource. I have such an appreciation for other moms/dads who have such valuable insight!

Ryan Seltzer

It's been taking our toddler 30-45 mins to poop. From his first feelings and trying to actually going. We are a week in. Once he has a poop feeling, I just keep his pants off till he goes. I'll move on once he gets the hang of it better.

Seems normal to me as he is figuring this all out.

1 Wo.

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Emily Woods

25. März um 16:03

What the actual heck do you do when you have two other small children and you just cannot watch the one potty training even nearly most of the time. We are stuck (and I have already potty trained two children easily with this method so thought I knew what I was doing) at stage 4. Wees we are mostly successful but I swear I am missing the poo almost every single day and it's always when my back is turned but I just cannot follow one child about the house all day and still have the rest of us survive. Send help! Where are the other twin mums at??!

Rebecca Mangopoulos Santos

Offering sympathy cause I could barely watch just my one all day and make dinner or do anything else. We spent a week on block one and it's just not reasonable to get takeout or not clean the house/do laundry for that long. 🙏

1 Wo.

Antworten

Alyson Boyd

25. März um 03:54

Bedtime Nightmares

Advice needed! We transitioned our daughter to a toddler bed when she said she didn't want to wear a diaper anymore, so we thought we'd do night training (she is fully trained during the day). Well night training didn't go well, but now we have a whole other problem she still not stay in bed.

It's become a 2+ hour experience each night (going into 2.5 hours as I type this). Of her getting out, us putting her back in over and over and over again (she'll stay in anywhere from 1-10 minutes). I'll admit that after a couple weeks of this we aren't doing a great job of not engaging. We've tried a not engaging with her, a gate, sitting in her room for a while, telling her we'd check on her, etc. Nothing is working and we're going insane.

Any advice for those who have made it to the other side?

Dana Schwartz

Scrap the toddler bed and get a full size bed. Lay with her until she falls asleep. We've done that with all our littles and they all sleep through the night very well! Their new bed and space feels safe when you lay with them... hugs!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Britni Kipp

25. März um 02:28

My 24month old is pee potty trained. Well, she gets pee in the potty everytime even if she didn't pull her pants down in time and just sits on the potty with pants haha 🙄

But with poop she sits and then gets up over and over.

Then next thing you know she poops in her pants.

She's even sat on the potty for a bit looking at a book.. no poop until of course she's up and moving again.

If you ask her where poop goes she says "in the potty!"

She always freezes and looks shocked or like "it's happening!"

We've had times she's gotten the poop in the potty but the last couple days it's been a challenge and mostly in pants

TMI: but her poops can be solid or peanut buttery which I think are challenging and sometimes might come out faster than she expects but 🙄

Any advice? Anyone else doing the same?

Lara Wadsworth

Maybe try some sneaky pelvic floor relaxing exercises with her on the potty when she has to poop but it's not coming. Things like: blowing bubbles, taking deep breaths, reading a book together, etc. Good luck!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Haley Molzahn

• Folgen

25. März um 02:16

3 year old now thinks it's funny to poop everywhere

My 3 year old who was previously perfectly potty trained is now purposely pooping on the floor and in his pants and saying "I'm funny"

We have no idea where this behavior came from. He had a little bit of a potty regression earlier this month after a 3 day hospital stay Feb 28th-March 2nd for pneumonia but he seemed to rebound from that pretty quickly.

It's been three times in the last three days and my husband is pointing the finger at me saying "you said he's potty trained and now he's not" I told him we've been out of diapers for 6 months and he's been fine and we're not going back. We had to rediaper once during training and that was it and he's been fine every since.

He's the kind of kid you ask him if he needs to go and he's honest with a yes or no. I really never worry about him but now if you take your eyes off him for a second he's peeing on the floor and laughing or pooping in the middle of the living room. He started preschool this week which I know can cause regressions but is it really all down to that? He's on day two of preschool and had an accident at school

After thought- while he did start preschool this week the weekend before that we were at a family members house and 3 times in 2 hours he full on dropped giant poops all around her yard. I heard 'oh my God!' and looked and he was facing away from us, with an elephant trunk of a turd coming from his bottom just wide stance in the backyard grass. So this issue has been before he started preschool too and I'm just so frustrated that I'm getting a finger pointed at me by my husband who didn't participate at all during potty training. Just took credit when it was done just like sleep training

Also the teacher gave me a weird look when I said I don't use underwear. Like I suddenly grew a second head. I personally don't see a need for them with my son. He still sort of struggles with getting pants/shorts on and off. He can do it but he has a hard time with it and underwear made it harder so I don't do it. But the teacher was seriously judging me for not using underwear with him

Seryna Coley

First, who cares what the teacher thinks 😂 underwear isn't for everyone.

Second, it sounds like you're under tremendous pressure from your husband to have your 3 year old perform perfectly, I'd be willing to bet this causes some anxiety for you when he has accidents. Kids pick up on that. Fully potty trained kids will still occasionally have accidents, your husband needs to accept that and either put the work in and help you, or completely butt out and say nothing.

As for the accidents, I would do my best to give the behavior as little attention as possible and keep it simple "We don't poop on the floor. We poop on the potty." In a neutral tone with a straight face, and clean up. Make sure to say "We poop on the potty" LAST, so that's the last thing he hears. I would have him help clean up pee accidents, but not poo because I'd be worried about it ending up in his mouth or eyes or something (maybe I'm just paranoid though, poop has caused pink eye in my son multiple times and a UTI for my daughter.)

As for what happened at your family's house, I'm sorry that happened!!! Unfortunately your kiddo will likely embarrass you many, many times in your life. You can't control everything, but you can only control how you react to it. Brush off other's opinions of your child, I know it's hard, but practice that, because no matter what you do someone will disagree or judge you, it's just how people are.

To make you feel better, my first born thought that since you can pee on a tree, you can also poop on one and pooped on a tree at the park TWICE 🤦🏻 we had friends there and the park was busy. You're not alone 😂

1 Wo.

Antworten

Hailey Jo Rhoden

24. März um 23:40

My daughter turned 3 at the beginning of March and we are going on 7 months now of potty training. She seemed like she was getting it for a while and had long stretches of no accidents but for the past 2+ months we've had daily accidents. Sometimes 1 sometimes 5 or more. Shes been on Exlax and MiraLAX to try to clear her out and regulate her thinking that was the issue but it's not getting better. They're mostly small accidents and she'll finish on the potty but I'm at my wits end. Idk what else to do. We need her fully trained by August before she starts Pre K. We have started going to block 1 at home but she's at daycare during the day. Doesn't seem to be helping.

Mary Janko

24. März um 22:50

Currently in block 2! What do we do about toddlers that start getting upset with Prompting?

Example: I'll tell my toddler "it's time to go to the potty". I don't think it's over prompting as I only do it when I see his potty tells. He will cry and say "no potty. No have to go!" And then go in his pants a couple minutes later? Is this something that will just iron itself out over time? I tell him "ok. Potty is there when you're ready"

Stephanie Dierks

I ended up setting a special timer and if they didn't go by the timers noise then they knew they had to go try. I did the UFO ... Mehr anzeigen

1 Wo.

Antworten

Katie Alice

24. März um 16:32

My now 5 year old son was/is quite a challenge to potty train. He was a cereal poop withholder. I say was, but even though he doesn't squat in a corner anymore, he now chooses to sit on the potty to hold it in 🙄

Now my daughter (3 years old) is the opposite. For reference we've been training her since early last year. She always gets her poop in the potty, but is constantly having pee accidents. Most of the time she goes to the bathroom and pees right next to the toilet. If I ask her if she needs to pee pee, she will lie to me and say she doesn't, but then have an accident. If I tell her it's time to go potty it's a whole fight, she drags her feet, and then often has an accident in the bathroom. If we go out, she will not tell us when she needs to pee. She had an accident at the grocery store yesterday and my husband was furious. We're so fed up. She's very strong willed and difficult to deal with when something isn't her idea.

We've tried m&m's for successfully peeing on the potty. I've tried a sticker chart, which she was initially excited about, but lost interest in. We've tried having her clean it up herself but she actually likes to help. I've tried setting timers, but she fights me every time I tell her it's time to go. She loves being naked, so as soon as she has an accident she removes her pants and undies and happily runs around naked like nothing happened.

She does get upset when she has an accident. She starts crying and tells us she's sorry.

Any suggestions?

Christine Rapposelli

That sounds tough! I'm no expert, but it sounds like you may have strayed away from the book's method in a few ways. Over prompting, timers, and rewards are discouraged.

It sounds like maybe she could use a refresher on her body awareness and isn't really sure of the "I need to pee" feeling?

The book also harps on how stressed parental energy can put unintentional pressure on them. She might not be confident to pee if she's been having accidents that result in furious parents.

If she likes being naked, maybe spend some naked time to observe? Don't prompt, and wait until she starts peeing before taking her? The "throw away" prompting helped us. Like "you look like you might have to pee, your potty is right there when you need it" and leave it alone.

Just some brainstorming thoughts. Good luck!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Mariam Kapsali

24. März um 15:26

.

Hi all! My question is when should we be moving to block 2? I have read the book, some sections many times over. I have started training my 24 month old. We're in Day 6, Block 1. I am not sure when we should be moving to Block 2. The book says when they can pee in the potty, prompted or not, but my question is: every time, most of the time or some times? We've had some successful pees and poos, some self initiated, some just well-timed prompts, since Day 2, but the last two days it's mostly been ignoring my prompts and peeing on the floor a few minutes later. There's been some resistance because I was overprompting and there's general clinginess. I am trying to figure out prompting vs keeping it casual and give privacy which I learnt was important from Day 1

Anna Freeman

Advisor

There's a post about moving to block 2 at the bottom of the featured section with more info

1 Wo.

Antworten

Allyson Molina

24. März um 15:24

.

Parents, I need advice. We've been potty training my 22 month old for a week+ (8 days) both day and night training, but we are TIRED. He's made so much progress and is trying, but waking him up 2x a night is wearing us all down. He has an accident if it's 1x/night.

Has anyone reverted back to diapers at night and then been successful later on with night training? Or did that totally mess up day training, too? I don't want to throw away our progress, but don't want be stubborn if it's not working. I also don't want to make day training confusing. Goal is to set us all up to win!

Side note: I'm not asking for opinions about his age. He's getting it and is allowed to make mistakes while learning. We just switched to block 2 and the shorts are causing accidents, but we will get there!

Thanks for reading. 💜

Kim Bishop

You're doing a great job! I potty trained my kiddo starting at 20 months and hes got it so please don't give up completely! You know your kiddo best and if you believe they can do, they can! In regards to night training, the book recommends delaying night training until around 30 months and i don't think youll fully undo daytime progress to put kiddo back in diapers for nighttime. I still use diapers for nap and nighttime for my son but we call them "nap/nighttime underwear" so hes starting to think about them that way. And I talk to him about staying dry during naps and nighttime and honestly, his amount of pee in the diaper is lessening. According to the book, kiddos younger than 30 months are not as likely to be able to hold their pee overnight so please don't be discouraged if nighttime just isn't working. Protect your sanity, get daytime training on lock and come back to night training in a few months.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Bree Paden

24. März um 14:46

What's going on? Ideas? Started training 2.5 months ago and he count on quick. In undies and shorts within 2 weeks. In the last 48 hours he's had 2 carseat and 3 on the floor pee accidents. He was down to maybe one a week. Nothing new going on in our lives. He's 25 months. Only uses the word poop to tell us he needs to go but for pee he just walks us or himself to the potty. The accidents will also happen 20 minutes after having just gone and he was holing up to 2-2.5 hours before.

Miriam Ferko

Growth, skill breakthroughs in other areas can cause them to drop spoons in this area.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Hannah Perkins Foniciello

24. März um 13:53

Nighttime Troubles

My LO will be 3 in May and seldom has accidents during the day now. Nighttime is a different matter. As hard as we've tried (no water 2 hours before bed, dream pees at all hours of the night) she still wets the bed most nights. We are leaving for an extended trip the end of April and I'm not sure if she'll be ready by then. At this point I'm seriously considering nighttime pull ups until after our trip and handling it after we get back. What I'm worried about is if I introduce pull ups at night, will she regress? Or is there anything else I should try first? TIA!

Ashley Jacob McKenzie

I don't think if you have to use a pull up it's going to derail things. My daughter is 3 and PT at 20 months-she wears underwear for daytime and naps. She wears pull ups at night and that's because I don't want to wake her and all and I think in time will just stop. I will say when she is in a pull and needs to pee before bed she still says something. Maybe rebrand it a little and call them something else if you have to???

1 Wo.

Antworten

Candice Paige

24. März um 12:49

.

Every time I think we are almost there we have massive steps backwards!

I started potty training my 23 month old in mid Jan. It's been up and down but we got to the point where all poos were going in the toilet/potty and at daycare she was initiating wees on the toilet most of the time (averaging one accident a day). At home she rarely initiated but was still going well. Over the last week and a half I've seen a massive regression and so have daycare. She has stopped initiating at daycare and at home will look me in the eye say wee wee and just wee 🙄

Im so close to quitting but I know she can do it! Any tips to get through this. Is it a phase? Regression? Send help! Feel like I'm swimming in pee.

Kristy Shen

24. März um 03:39

.

Stuck in Block 2 for a week, Need help eliminating accidents

Hi group! We did the Oh Crap method successfully for Block 1, and we're trying to get our 2.5 year old to wear pants in Block 2.

The problem is, he has at least 1 accident per day. We then move him back to bottomless, where he improves and can go into the potty. But then we add pants back on, and then a little while later he has another accident. The cycle repeats, and we don't know how to get out.

We are prompting him to sit on the potty every 90 minutes. When he has an accident, we make him clean up and take the dirty clothes to the laundry, which he does. But no matter how many times we do this, he still has 1-3 accidents per day.

Any suggestions? We are stuck.

Kirsty Broadmore

I would say don't revert back to block 1 and keep him in pants even when having accidents

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nicole Wilkinson

24. März um 03:01

Need overnight help quick!

Just had to send my 4 year old to bed without a pull up for the first time because we're out and can't find any in his size right now. I'm hoping this'll be what needs to happen to finally get him overnight trained. But what do we do tonight!? How often should we take him in the middle of the night? He's been daytime potty trained for over 1.5 years, and in that time he's never gotten up on his own to go potty overnight. He's got nightlight in the hallway and bathroom. There's no deterrents to getting up and going potty in the middle of the night, he just doesn't.

Jillian Dugan

Book recommends twice a night, but my boy did find with once a night. We did keep a small potty in his room when we started nights, but he was 2 and a half. When he turned 4 I woke him and walked him to the bathroom and he peed and back to sleep. Depending on bedtime, I would wake him around 1-1:30am.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kim Bishop

24. März um 02:49

Hi, i need some advice about a situation we're in at swimming lessons.

My LO is 23 months and is completely potty trained during the daytime - he self-initiates both pee and poop and hasn't had a miss in about a month. He even does great in public! We are waiting on night training for now until closer to 30 months.

However, at his swim lessons, he poops in his swim diaper without any warning! Luckily the pool has a double-diaper policy and nothing leaks out but he'll tell me "I pooped" after the fact and we have to leave his lesson. The pool is a hydrotherapy pool so its warmer and I'm wondering if that's affecting his ability to know he has to go. And if so, what should I do about this?

I prompt him to poop before class but he says he doesn't have to go. I also talk with him about holding his pee and poop during swim lessons. I hoped this would work because we can tell him to hold it when we're out in public or in the car and he does it... it just hasn't worked for the pool. Any advice would be great! Thanks!

Lela Brown

My little one is about the same stage of potty training and I notice exercise often brings on a bm. Maybe you could run around or do some baby yoga beforehand and see if that helps?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Emma Sebby

23. März um 21:12

23.5 month old - day 1 of Block 1 (I know it's still early) - any tips for prompting them to release pee into the potty?! He is VERY aware when he pees on the floor (says mama wet and starts heading to the potty himself). He's very happy to sit on the potty for 5+ minutes. But despite all my efforts (blow bubbles, reading books, holding toys, etc) he will not get any pee out into the toilet. Any tips? I feel like once he learns to release it we'll be good to go

Alicia Jackson

I'm one day ahead of you with a 22 month old. Yesterday my little guy dribbled all over the floor. He would sit on the potty and play but couldn't get him to empty in the potty. Just kept at it today and tried to do relaxing activities together along with some different prompting. In the block one drama chapter (listened to it last night) the author recommends saying "let me hear you pee in the potty." I don't think this worked for mine (maybe too young) but I did tell him to try and push the pee out, keep going, see if there's more in there, etc. We sang songs, read some books and played the harmonica on the potty and and finally before nap he got it and then all afternoon I was able to get him to go prompted!! All to say just keep at it. Maybe he just needs some more time! I did try the feet in warm water and he just made a mess and it didn't work but I have seen that recommended quite a bit so also worth a shot!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Melissa Thompson

23. März um 17:52

Does anyone have success with daycare doing training underwear during the day but switching to pull up for nap only? It's more of a policy thing on their end when the child is newly potty trained.

Ashlie Miller

yes my daughter had to do it like that.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Steph Geraci

23. März um 15:59

Has anyone used a potty watch and has it worked for more strong-willed kids? 🕒

After 6 months we still need to constantly prompt our 31mo & still have power struggles 😅 wondering the watch will be “cooler” than his parents having to remind him to go!

BraveChipmunk889

We haven't used a clock but I do have a timer that I used for my son and he knows when it goes off to sit on the potty. He sometimes fights it but most of the time he stops what he's doing to sit. I will say that he also self initiates but these past three days we have been having more accidents than usual.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Cady Womack

23. März um 15:29

Starting potty training Saturday! Excited and nervous. My son was showing lots of interest so we bought a potty chair a while ago and he would pee in it before bath time and has pooped several times in it but the last couple weeks he has regressed so we put up the potty chair and are officially starting Saturday. Any last minute items we need? Any advice?

We have:

Two potty's for living room and bathroom

Boxers for block 2

Travel potty and foldable potty seat for future visits

Sensory bottles

Books for by the potty

Anna Freeman

Advisor

Boxers aren't until block 3, block 2 is just pants with nothing underneath. Good luck!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Sheena Santiago

23. März um 14:50

.

Bean Bear has officially arrived 🐻 🚽 ... Mehr anzeigen

KnowledgeablePeacock9026

Just be aware- your child may say "bye bye pee" to people as well. lol 😂

1 Wo.

Antworten

April Landgraf

23. März um 14:31

My daughter's 15 months old, and she pulls on her diaper when it's wet and takes it off. I started potty training yesterday and we had 3 successes and 5 learning experiences. I'm concerned because I'm 26 weeks pregnant and she's so young that I'm afraid she'll regress and we'll have major problems later.

Laura Fowler Prewitt

She will regress. No matter what age you put, there will be regressions. So regression now or regression later 🙄 but consistency is key! Keep tracking that success mama, she'll get there. Just like when they learn to walk, they fall. But we don't stop teaching them to walk.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Mary Cristi

23. März um 13:22

My son is going through some sort of rebellious regression right now and idk what to do. Maybe just go back to block 1? Idk.

He's about to turn 2 and we're about 2 months into potty training. He did awesome at first, it clicked after about a week and he had zero accidents for weeks, then we did a little overnight trip and he had a tiny regression but was fine within a couple days. Now a month after that, he is having at least 2-3 pee accident a day, and some are on purpose. For example, he starts to pee on the potty then stands up and finishes standing and spraying all over the bathroom. This morning when he woke up, I said okay let's take off your diaper and go potty and he threw a tantrum. Once he calmed down I took his diaper off and said okay, we can go to the potty when you're ready but do not pee in the bed. He laughed and looked at me and started to pee in bed. Then I picked him up to bring him to the potty and he absolutely lost it, full blown tantrum. What is going on and what can I do?

Emily Munn

This is happening to my 23 month old right now. I thought we were in such a good spot but suddenly the push back about going potty then so many accident a day.. many of them seem intentional. Sorry you didn't get any advice here.. how has the past few days gone? Have you done anything that has helped?

4 Tage

Antworten

Anya Rose

23. März um 05:33

.

My 19 MO is in daycare 3 days a week 8:30a-5p. Daycare says thy don't have the means to potty kids until they're 2, and in the room upstairs closer to the toilets. The other 4 days he's with people who will help potty train (me, his dad, or grandma). Should I wait until he's two? Can this age switch between diapers in daycare and potty at home? Will that just confuse him? The author says yes at one point, but no at another. Anyone have experience with this?

Lauren Waller

▪ Folgen

23. März um 01:51

.

My son — 19m — seems to have lots of signals (being frantic, whiny, looking down, grunting, etc), but they're very much not consistent or mean multiple things, and/or when I put him on the potty he doesn't go.

I think I'm at the point of thinking there's a "glitch in the matrix" sort of thing going on (and the tactics she suggested don't seem to work).

We've caught a few pees, but nothing super regular, he seems to have very good bladder control. I'm kind of at a loss and don't know what to try next. Do I just do a "reset" and wait until he's a little older?

Nicole Millard

I potty trained my 19 month old. ... Mehr anzeigen

2 Wo.

Antworten

Jessie Thompson

23. März um 00:40

.

Please help. Child is 2.5 years. We have been potty training for 3 months. Poop is great, self initiating. Peeing is a mess. Always pees when we put on the potty. We know cues, we do easy catches plus other times we have figured out. No matter what we do there are multiple accidents everyday. It seems like there is no understanding of the feeling of needing to pee. I'm at a loss. Any and all suggestions welcome 🙏

DeterminedPineapple6906

Following for ideas. We're in a similar situation except my son is now 22 months.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Kirstin Lyon

22. März um 23:12

I haven't started training yet but I've read the book and I'm a bit confused on the method. It says to not expect self initiation for the first few weeks or even longer. So we wait for them to start peeing, pick them up and move them to the potty, and then what? If we can't expect them to go on their own, then what does progress look like? Are people just prompting on a regular schedule for weeks/months?

Brittney Dee Bosh

I never really prompted. Both my kids either took themselves to the potty or told me they needed to go from the start. I only prompted before car rides and bedtime/naps... or if they started doing the pee dance. Sometimes I would prompt if it had been a few hours, but if they told me they didn't have to go, I trusted them.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Deborah Villarreal

22. März um 22:40

Help needed

We started potty training my 27 month old 7 days ago. He withheld his poop for the first 2.5 days but then slowly started doing tiny squirts. We'd manage to catch him and put him on the potty. He just wanted to sit on it for 30 mins at a time while he was withholding/leaking. It went on like that for another 2-3 days. All the while he would pee and say "I peed" or I'd catch him mid stream and sit him on the toilet. It feels like we haven't had any progress. He woke up yesterday to an overnight pull up full of poop (he never would poop at night but I think he finally released everything).

We've all got sick with the flu, we started a week after his symptoms were getting better but he still has had mild congestion (going on two weeks). Idk if that affects anything.

Is there anyone to talk to for help??

Rasa Zovaitė

22. März um 22:12

.

Nearly 2 months into potty training twins. How to move towards block 4?

While one is doing great (almost) and is in block 4, other one who originally had poo withholding issues is now confident in making poo in the potty, but... he is still having lots of accidents, and more at home than out 😞

He can and knows where the pee/ poo goes and if we bring him to the potty he would mostly so one or another, unless he really doesn't want at the time.

But he very often just either forgets or holds until it's too late or just being so busy playing that he wees in his pants and don't even really care.

I see sometimes he wants but when trying to bring him to the potty he resists, refuses, runs away, and then it all ends up in the pants as he can't hold it longer. If he would let us take him to the potty when we know it's time, there would be so much less accidents. But doing it by force doesn't feel right for us.

He is currently in between block 2-3 (wearing underwear in nursery though).

Pease throw me any tips/ tricks if you are in a similar situation or been there - what has helped you to progress further and get more self initiating. I don't know what I am doing wrong 🙄

Darine Flanagan

22. März um 21:53

Feeling lost and at a standstill at 4 weeks in 😞 dont know what to do!?

Started with our 23 month old about a month ago. First 10 days all felt progressive- block 1 was cleared quickly, having dribbles but then rest in potty, out and about having dribbles and then telling me...

But the last week has been terrible. When at home with nothing on bottom and not tired, still great. With anything on indoors - variable. As soon as we're outside with anything on, its countless accidents, hes stopped telling us and has even had more poo accidents (which we only had one of at beginning)

I don't know where to go from here, as going back to commando seems to not change anything and I feel like hes just getting used to peeing in his pants.

Also bonus is that at the start,naps and nights began to be fairly dry and now its vast majority very wet.

It's all getting worse, and I don't know what to do.

Do I just do the same but carry on??

Im consistently washing like 7 pairs of trousers a day and we're a month in?!

Most people i chat to had it down by now. Helpppp

Miriam Ferko

New skills, feeling poorly, and physical growth in other areas cause them to drop spoons in this area. It will keep happening but be less pronounced each time.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Darlene Olivia

22. März um 21:40

Night Training

So I thought we'd wait until summer for night training. He probably could have done the whole thing at once, but I wasn't ready for it. Almost immediately, he was having dry diapers through naps and overnight. Lately, it feels like he is holding pee until nap or bed when he's at home. His diapers are pretty full of pee when he wakes up now. Is this a sign I need to move up my timeline?

For context: I'm a teacher so summer would allow me to give my undivided attention to it. My son is also currently only almost 2y5mo. In July, he will be 2y8mo. I'm not ready to transition him to a toddler bed and he still sleeps so well in his crib.

Alida H

Given that he was having dry nights before you will probably find you don't have to do anything other than remove the diaper as an option as it sounds like rather than needing it overnight he is using it as a way to delay pottyng when awake.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Keri Johnson

22. März um 17:13

Accidents

My toddler (22 months now) was potty trained in February. She caught on really quickly and almost instantly was potty trained. No accidents or peeing in her pull up at night. Suddenly, she is now peeing her pants and sometimes not telling us. Multiple accidents a day and peeing in her pull up at night (which I don't mind) is this normal? I still prompt her but she can hold it sometimes for 2-3 hours without going during the day. For example, we went potty right when we woke up. Haven't even been up 2 hours and nothing to drink and she's peed her pants twice and hasn't gone on the toilet except the initial wake up. She also had two accidents yesterday (once playing outside so understandable) I know she's really young so I try not to get frustrated but she was doing so well and suddenly just decided to stop.

Also to add - she is in a very much "two year old" stage so prompting her to go when she doesn't want to turns into a whole tantrum 😅

Aleaha Coffman

It's pretty normal for kids to regress occasionally and the "terrible twos" are the place to do it 😅 just continue with positive reinforcements and reminders to go potty. Their brains are so busy that they just forget sometimes or they get invested in something and don't listen to their bodies.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Saylor Neese

22. März um 16:55

.

Block 1 day 2- 23 month old - we aren't scared of the potty or rejecting it, but not asking for it when it's time to tee tee. I'm just having to watch her and when she starts, we rush and finish in the potty. Is this normal?

Kendra Bain

The book says not to expect self-initiation until about 3 weeks into potty training. Until then, yes, it's up to you

2 Wo.

Antworten

Jessica Packard

22. März um 16:20

I've hit another regression and my goal is to stay in the house and go back to block 1 for at least a day. Dad says "put clothes on him and go outside" but that defeats the purpose. We live in a neighborhood with views to the street so I'm not comfortable being bottomless outside. Thoughts, solutions I'm not seeing?

Patty Torland

Long T-shirt? We've always done a skirt or dress/bottomless outside, but she's a girl so we had one on hand. If that won't work for you, I'd use like baggy basketball shorts. Heck I'd even get a super cheap plain dress for him specifically just for training and being able to go outside. Just no pictures unless you want to embarrass him later 😂

😊 you could probably even use a tea towel to tie around his waist just to keep his parts covered but still technically be bottomless. 🧑

2 Wo.

Antworten

Erin Smith

22. März um 15:26

Block 2

We've been in block 2 for over a week and my daughter keeps peeing in her pants and sometimes catches it and finishes in the potty but a lot of times doesn't even notice. We've tried going back to block 1 and she's totally fine and has no accidents being naked but is peeing through multiple pairs of pants daily. Anyone else deal with this?

Jessica Packard

Yes! I dealt with this too. I was able to get my son more practice by putting on pants after a pee and then taking them off close to when I know he's gonna pee again. Then he would run to the potty. I also talking about "keeping pants dry" a lot. "We don't like that soggy feeling."

2 Wo.

Antworten

Brenna Drew

22. März um 03:46

.

Hi my daughter is almost 3 and has had so many accidents past few days..

She's been potty trained since last summer but this past week at school she's had tons of pee accidents. Teacher said she asks to go and as they walk down hall to bathroom she has accident... and sometimes she doesn't say when she has to go and has accident...

What do I do? I thought it was cuz she was constipated but she pooped todsy although they were hard small balls but idk.

Help!

Jamie Lauer

22. März um 03:21

.

We are on day 9, block 3, and we still have at least one pee accident a day. And it seems like my son is now fully eliminating when he has an accident instead of doing some and then finishing up the rest on the potty. Is that normal? Does it mean we are moving too fast through the blocks? I'm worried my son is going to start developing the inner f*ck it. He shows recognition that he's peeing when he goes, but I don't really see any of the other reactions the book says you want (dismay, disgust, etc.). I tell him clearly that pee goes in the potty and not on the floor and that he should keep paying attention to the feeling of having to go to help him next time, but it feels like I'm just "scolding" him without giving him any way to really learn from the incident. Tonight he peed on me while sitting on my lap pants-less, and usually he's pretty good at recognizing when he has to go when he doesn't have pants on, so that felt like a big step backwards. Just not sure how concerned I should be. It feels very discouraging.

Kelly Johnson

22. März um 02:10

End of day 4 block 1, 23 month old. She has escalating fear of release and getting dirty. She is highly aware of when she needs to go, and if she feels a drop she'll sprint for the toilet.

But then she's terrified of sitting on it and peeing (she'll sit any other time happily). She'll sit briefly and run away, feel the dribble and run back, until she finally can't contain herself anymore. Then she'll have an accident, usually in front of the potty with a little bit making it to the potty when I put her on there, which leads to screaming and stopping as soon as she can. This can last an hour.

I have tried warm water (she freaked out), running water (no effect), bubbles (no effect), singing and counting (screaming). If I leave, she rushes out screaming. Baby potty in the kitchen, one in the bathroom, and a toilet seat on the bathroom toilet. She's most interested in the big toilet.

She just told me she needs to potty and requested I bring her dinner and water to the bathroom. She's walking circles around me, potty dancing, occasionally sitting on the big toilet, and climbing up on it and then down, sitting for 1 second, and telling me "all done". Over and over again. This can last an hour until she finally overflows.

I'm just at a loss as we seek to be at basically a stalemate right now.

Jamie Lauer

Have you tried the red solo cup trick? When my son is resistant (particularly to public toilets and the car potty), we offer to let him go in the pee cup. He usually thinks it's a fun solution. It won't fix the overall fear of the potty, but it might give you a short-term solution while you help her work through that fear.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anastasia Zastavetska

22. März um 00:23

.

Block 2 struggles

We started potty training my 26 m old yesterday and she was telling us every time she had to go pee, no accidents while naked. Today we started commando and she hasn't told us once or showed any signs "pee dance", many pee accidents, unless we prompt her just in time, and she pooped her pants twice.

Does it mean she's not ready for Block 2?

We did take off her clothes today again at some point and she told us she needed to pee, but when a light loose dress goes on —she starts having accidents.

Danielle Bialick

We went through the same with my daughter yesterday! We went back to block 1 after she had 2 accidents in a row and then moved to block 2 again this morning and she had a success this morning!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Karen Reitinger

21. März um 22:00

.

Starting to second guess if I'm committed to potty training my 25 month old girl. I'm 31 weeks pregnant and on day 2 of block one. No real progress from day 1 but I'm trying to stay positive.

It's getting real tiring for me (even with dad's help) to catch any pee accidents she has and I'm starting to wonder if it would be better to wait and try again this summer when I'm not pregnant anymore.

I took her out of daycare Friday to do a 3 day naked weekend. Plan is to have her back in daycare on Monday where they want her in undies but will assist with taking her to the potty with a familiar teacher. She'll be transitioned to a new class so I'm worried this won't work well if she's not around her friends.

Should we continue on with the training in hopes that she catches on? Or pause for now and wait until I'm not pregnant and maybe more of her friends are ready at the same time so they can train together?

Any thoughts or advice would be appreciated!

Melissa Jones Dirkson

I started training at 33 weeks pregnant. First day he probably peed on the ground 20 times. He slowly progressed but it definitely wasn't linear. On day 5 he went back to daycare in underwear. I was only able to do 1/2 a day in phase 2. He was transitioned to a new room (that allowed him to use the bathroom) and honestly he really struggled with that (cried a lot). On Thursday he had no accidents. Friday he had 2. But he is definitely progressing! I'm only 9 days in, so who knows what the future holds, but I'm so glad we are doing this now and not after baby gets here.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Valeria Elena Cavazos

21. März um 21:38

.

Hello fellow Oh Crappers! My 24 month old started block 1 this morning and I'm feeling very anxious about how it's going so, I joined this group seeking advice, tips, solidarity, and commiserations:) The little one is napping now having only peed once all morning - none of it made it in the potty. Pray for us!

Nichole Marie

I was a wreck day 1. 30+ little pittles and maybe 7 got into the potty. It was exhausting lmao but day 2 was significantly better

2 Wo.

Antworten

Kenya Ramirez

21. März um 20:23

.

Need advice

We are on Day 5 of Block One, there's definitely some progress. She self initiates (maybe once a day), we have less floor accidents and she seems to understand.

My dilemma is, I completely forgot in a couple of days it's my niece's birthday and their house has some carpet, and I'm struggling to figure out what to do. Do I put a pull up on her and take her to the bathroom when I believe she needs to go, do I put underwear under her pull up so she still feels wet, what do I do 🤔 any advice is seriously appreciated

Charissa Laidig

We potty trained my son at 2 1/2 and I brought the potty with me to a graduation party 🤣 my daughter is 20 months and I'm just putting her in pull ups right now when we go out and that doesn't really affect her when we're at home

2 Wo.

Antworten

Amy Hoggins

21. März um 19:40

.

Couple of issues here so maybe a long post. My son is 4 next month and had been doing so well until he started his new pre-school in January. Since then he's had a big regression, which i know can be normal, but I don't believe every accident is an accident as he will often pee himself in front of me and show me, then flutter his eyelashes and smirk in my face. He knows full well when he needs to go and what he has done and taunts me with it. Some of it I do believe is accidental but not all. My other problem is that he's due for corrective surgery to his penis at some point this year and I'm not sure how to handle this as I worry it will regress him further right before starting school in September, anyone been through anything similar?

Jillian Marguerite

Going to pm you.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Jessica Bañales

21. März um 19:35

This is just to say that potty training is for sure not linear. This method worked extremely well with my 24mo when we did it with him. But we are not successful YET with my 24mo daughter. She's literally pooping on herself daily.

Chantelle Barron

21. März um 18:23

Hi! I'm new to this group. I have a 9 year old son who we used this method for to potty train 7 years ago. He did fantastic with it. Honestly, I am preparing to now potty train my daughter with the method so I am re reading the book to brush up and everything that is said about the magic unicorn children who just get it right away and have no issues, that was my son. He had 1 pee accident on day 1, and no other accidents after that, by day 5 he was pants on with underwear for daycare and no issues. He has only had one other accident in his entire life and he was about 7 years old, really sick and trusted a fart in the middle of the night lol. We did the day and night training together and he mastered both quickly. Now, like I said we are preparing to potty train my daughter who is 22months and I am scared of how hard it may be. We got off easy with my son and I thought it was just the method but now I'm realizing it was more likely just that we found the perfect timing and combo with him. I am not prepared for multiple accidents and it taking a month to be honest. I'm just nervous. I know that mindset is not good to go into it but with having more than 1 kid now it'll be hard to keep eyes on her and monitor my son, he has school and after school activities and I don't have much of a support system for the daily things. Just venting I guess

Alexa Marie

21. März um 17:21

How do you handle it when your kid is in the car and says they have to go potty every 5 minutes? I don't want to invalidate her but we also can't stop the car every time she says she has to go potty, especially when I know she just went like 10 minutes ago. I'm assuming she's just using it as a way to get attention or get out of the car but I also don't want her to pee her pants 😬

Jessica Dooley Ophus

I say, okay, let's hold it until we find a safe place to stop. I know you can hold it for a few minutes.

Sometimes a few minutes ends up being 45 lol

2 Wo.

Antworten

Sheena Santiago  fühlt sich enttäuscht.

21. März um 15:49

🎯 Target run = FAIL 😭

No Ms. Rachel. No Bean Bear.

But somehow... we left with a big potty 😂

Amazon it is 🤖 📦

What's the ONE thing your kid is obsessed with right now?? 🙌

#momlife #pottytrainig #target #msrachel

Nicole Millard

I found Bean Bear at winners!

My 20 month old is absolutely obsessed with his hotwheels. And his furreal bunny

2 Wo.

Antworten

Leah Grandinetti

21. März um 12:51

Nighttime training

My son has been daytime trained since just over 2. It was a bumpy road with lots of accidents but he did get to a good place around 3. Still the occasional accidents but they are not as frequent. He turns 4 next month.

We had not tackled nighttime training because for as long as I can remember, he would wake up with a FULL diaper. Some nights soaking through his pyjamas and sheets. In recent weeks, there was less pee in his overnight diaper. We have had conversations about trying to hold his pee overnight but never pushed too hard.

Then earlier this week, he woke up dry 3 nights in a row. We praised him and he was very proud of himself. He begged us not to wear a diaper overnight anymore and was so happy. So took the overnight diapers away. The first two nights, he woke up completely dry. But the past two nights, he has wet the bed overnight.

I know it might have been a quick decision to pull them but I don't know where to go from him. Just keep going as is and deal with the accidents? Or should we start waking him at night? Or put the diaper back on? I want to support him and not confuse him.

Janine Sadler

Encourage him to sit a bit longer on the potty to get that bladder properly emptied

2 Wo.

Antworten

Katie Hedrick-Bohn

21. März um 03:11

My 25 month old is scared of releasing pee. She holds it all morning until nap when she will pee in her sleep (no nap diaper). Then she tries to hold it until bedtime. When she shows signs of needing to pee she will usually sit on the potty with no fuss but will continue to hold it.

When she finally feels like she can't hold it anymore she starts escalating with getting increasing nervousness. She may even let out a couple drops but then continues to hold the rest.

I have tried the red solo cup trick, she hits it away. I tried giving her privacy by "forgetting something in the other room", she just follows me. Or if I close the bathroom door she cries for me to come back. I will give her 5ish minutes but she does not go.

I tried saying "I can see you have to pee, there's the potty" and directing her to go sit on her own after helping push her pants down. She will go look at the potty but not sit, just continue to do the potty dance.

Hayley Wyatt

Warm water? Running bath water?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Bria Schmitz

21. März um 01:22

.

21 month old male.

My son is doing so well potty training with pee but does a potty dance, and gets frustrated when he has to poop. He eventually cries and begs for a diaper. We give him a diaper and he poops. Is this normal? How do we break this? I feel so bad I hate to see him frustrated

Please any help we will take.

Thank you!

Kelsey Jeskey

I wouldn't give him a diaper. I would push fluids and have him sit.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Liz Lam

21. März um 00:33

.

27 months girl. Started block one yesterday. She didn't pee even though she had to. Crying screaming doing potty dance asking to be held. Yesterday was able to get her to sit on potty with much protest. Today no sits. More crying and screaming. She has extreme fear of release of pee. It was so stressful and painful to watch I want to table and delay it till May when I have 3 weeks off from work to try again. Does fear of release get better when they get older?

Brooke Martin

We also had this same issue- same age but a boy. Went 4 days with extreme resistance so decided to reset and will try again in may!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Todd Blocksidge

20. März um 23:07

.

First day nightmare... he doesn't want to go naked/half naked.

Kendra Bain

I think people might need more information in order to be able to offer help

2 Wo.

Antworten

Monica Cunningham

20. März um 21:39

.

We are in block 2 (with undies for daycare only) and struggling with our daughter withholding poop. She is not having accidents, she is just withholding. Our first day in block 1, she got a poop on the potty. The second day she pooped in her nap diaper. She then went three days without pooping until she pooped in her bedtime diaper. It's now been two days again and no poop yet.

We have tried backing off/less pressure, privacy, videos, books, increasing fiber/whole grains, and more, but she is still fearful of pooping on the potty.

We reached out to her doctor who recommended we put her back in diapers temporarily. We really don't want to do that because she is doing great otherwise. Considering a stool softener, but the doctor didn't give any guidance on that. Any suggestions?

Elizabeth Pavey

We just went through this too! In addition to lots of fiber and water, we started watching for our daughter's "trying to poop face." I would let her actually start trying to go while wearing pants, and then when I felt like it'd be hard for her to stop herself, I took off her pants and let her poop into the potty while standing. I held it right under her! She was still scared, but it was less nerve-wracking to do it standing rather than sitting. After a few times of that, I started having her do a few minutes standing and then a few minutes sitting. Now (we're about 3 weeks into potty training), we've had a few done all on the potty! And her constipation has improved with the more regular BMs too. Best of luck!! And for reference, she was going anywhere between 2 to 3 days between poops.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Chelsey Kurzhal

20. März um 21:07

Just looking for thoughts, and maybe experiences. I really wanted to potty train my youngest (26mo) this coming week (starting Monday) as it's the last mostly free week we'll have until July and she and I are both very ready to be done with diapers. The only problem is, next Saturday we have a big zoo trip planned--like, 2.5 hour drive, all day kind of trip. I don't want her or us to be miserable at the zoo. Would you put your kid in diapers/training pants for one big special day like that? Or try to reschedule the zoo trip, or the potty training? Or just pack all the extra pants and hope? 😊

MomLifeUnlocked1

Go commando and hope for the best. this is the best practice she's ever gonna get lol

2 Wo.

Antworten

Brooke Smith Futch

20. März um 17:45

We used the Oh Crap potty training method with our daughter and it worked GREAT. But I'm noticing that it doesn't seem to be working as well for our son. I almost feel like the whole naked method is working as well for him because his pee doesn't just run down his legs like it did for our girl. It goes away from him, eliminating the unpleasant sensation that I think drove our success with our daughter. Any additional advice for training the boys??

Sarah Tan

I have boy/girl twins. My boy has been a dream. My girl is very up and down, lately very down. I don't believe in gender based differences anymore 😂

2 Wo.

Antworten

Lexi McInerney

20. März um 17:31

HELP i have. A 31 month old. At 28-29 months old We had a month of dry naps. We had two full weeks of dry overnights.

We went on a trip for two weeks at 29mths where he was waking up scared and would end up in bed with us. We were staying with family and couldn't risk him wetting their mattress so we did put him in a pullup for bed time. He continued to wake up dry in the pull up (referred to them as nighttime underwear) for a week and a half of the trip. Then he peed in it the last 4-5 days. He was very clearly conscious of making the decision to pee in it and they weren't actual accidents- they were barely wet pull-ups .

When we got home I told him no more pulls were back to always peeing on the potty. I knew there would be a regression but I could never have predicted this. We've been home a month and we have only had one dry night in that time. He's now 30.5m old and I think he's going when he wakes up rather than calling me to take him potty he's just choosing to go in the bed. He's waking up from an accident/ waking up and peeing when he wakes up 3 times a night. Everytime I've gotta strip the bed. He's not even staying dry for naps, even short ones anymore. I'm baffled as to how much of a turn this is taken. Are regressions like starting over but with even worse conditions than they were before??

I don't want the advice to put him back in a diaper and try again when he's older. He was dry for two weeks over night and a month for naps- he is 100% capable of doing this.

What is going on, what can I do??? I'm at my wits end.

Emily Collins Nielsen

Have you tried giving him a consequence for wetting the bed? It seems like he can control it, and has in the past, but maybe he needs a consequence like putting a favorite toy on the top of the fridge, or reducing TV privileges. I'm not an expert, but maybe this will be enough to give him the willpower to stop.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Laura Nash

20. März um 17:24

When did you stop prompting your child to go potty and instead let them initiate? My son will be 3 in May and has been potty trained for 8 months now, but he rarely initiates. I'm wondering if it's because we tell him to go every 2-3 hours because we're trying to prevent accidents. Are we maybe not giving him a chance to initiate?

GentlePeacock7073

Mine is training right now. He is 2.5 years old and most of the time he will tell me when he needs to potty unless he is really distracted

2 Wo.

Antworten

Jillian Marguerite

20. März um 15:56

.

Need advice!

1st day - 2 self initiated pees

2nd day - 5 pees on the floor, then 7 in the potty.

3rd day - pooped in the potty self initiated. 2 pees started on the floor. Then 5 on the floor.

Why is this happening?!

Vibha A Mistry

20. März um 14:47

.

Is there a group for this for kids who don't sleep through the night. (3 years old and up)

Hillary Marie

We hired a sleep coach for our older kiddo. It was like $400 and the best money we've spent aside from her ng tube weaning team.

Then with the twins one did great with sleep and one...didn't. We did sleep training with him and it's made a huge difference.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Alicia Jackson

20. März um 14:45

Looking for recommendations for pants for my tall and skinny boy. He is 23 months and about 15% for weight and 75% for height. Length wise he could fit 2T but even 18 month pants with a diaper are falling down on him. We're getting ready to start block 1 this weekend and I'm worried I don't have any pants that will stay up with him when we move to commando!

Alex Welch

20. März um 02:32

Regression

Our 2.5 year old was completely potty trained and this week has completely regressed. Will not initiate for either pee or poop. Then he doesn't even tell us when he pees, poops he tells us he pooped after. There's no change to our lifestyle currently, no additional stress at home or anything so we are at a loss. Do we go back to block 1? Do the whole thing over again?

Jessica Packard

Omg same! Almost 2.5 and having a regression. No changes here either. His sleep is changing too so maybe that's it?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Melissa Winters

20. März um 02:16

.

How do you all get your little to stay on the potty? We are on day 2, day 1 she did great. Multiple pees and a poo. Today started off with a pee and poo and then went downhill quickly. Says she has to go and then runs to bathroom and either turns around or sits on the potty for literally a second. Now we've had several accidents since she woke up from nap. I assume this is normal but boy is the back and forth frustrating! 🙄 advice?

Lena Elizabeth Langlitz

My son was a nightmare on day 1 & 2 and then day 3 he was fine. I think day 2 being awful is normal lol I give him a toy or something to keep him from getting bored sitting in the toilet. That seemed to help a good bit

2 Wo.

Antworten

Kirsten Michelle

20. März um 01:06

.

Self initiating

How long after starting potty training until kids begin to self initiate?

Jen Seeto

We potty trained at 3 and we noticed it was around 2 months afterwards that she consistently self-initiated, telling us when she needed the toilet. We have our routine times of the day, when we still have to say to her "it's time to go" but outside of those times, she'll let us know

2 Wo.

Antworten

Michelle Stefanac

19. März um 23:34

I am beyond frustrated. We have been actively potty training our 33 month old since before Christmas and he is still peeing all over my house! His daycare options unfortunately have resorted to pull-ups and I can't blame them at this point but I am 9 months pregnant and don't want to go backwards but I am at such a loss.

He can pee on command on the potty and will voluntarily poop on the potty. But whether he is naked, commado or in underwear he still has 1-4 accidents a day. Just choosing to mess on my floor or couch or wherever! Ironically the problem is worse at home than it is in public where he does pretty good at holding it so long as we take him regularly. But at home I will ask him. He says no, sits down to dinner and immediately pees everywhere!

Am I just being stubborn insisting he train on my schedule? He's a smart kid and is plenty old enough I just don't know what I am missing!

Grace Tibbitts

We've been in a similar situation and one thing you can do to encourage him to at least let you know that he has used his pull up is to put on underwear and then a pull up. It makes it uncomfortable for them without making a mess everywhere. It worked really well for our autistic kiddos who just weren't getting it. It eventually got us to a point where they would tell us they had gone, to where they would let us know when they needed to go. Hope this helps even just a little bit.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Matthew David

19. März um 23:22

Poop is an issue. He hasn't had a 2 in the potty since 2 small ones on day 1. In his pants mostly.

He's basically mastered pee - even to holding while we cleaned up his other accident. How do I recognize his good pee behaviours while addressing the poo issues.... Frustrating.

Jessica Bañales

I'm in the same boat 🤔😭 3weeks in and almost every poop has been in her undies. She goes daily (up until potty training she's holding for a day or two). Pee she does on the toilet and can hold for a bit too.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Kory Cathryn Bell

19. März um 21:16

Alright...I have 20 month old twin girls, one of them totally rolls with whatever is going on. The other one is, let's say "spirited", and just determined with the fire of 1000000 suns to figure out every single thing that crosses her path. She has probably been ready to potty train for about three months and already tells us when she is about to poop and when she has indeed pooped. But we delayed potty training cause we all got super sick over the holidays and then they were going through a series of bad teething and sleep regression stuff. So now she is refusing to allow us to put a diaper on her half the time and knows that if she says "pee pee" we will delay putting a diaper on her if she goes and sits on her potty, which she does for a few minutes with a book. we have yet to actually have a pee or poop in the potty. So a few minutes will pass on the potty and she will just be running around naked instead of trying to pee or poop on the potty. And I will be chasing her around to try to put a diaper on her. The problem is that we are doing an international move in 4 weeks...so the question is do I potty train her now? Or keep forcing diapers she obviously hates and wait till we are settled in our new house? Any opinions?

Brooke Martin

19. März um 19:31

.

Standing to potty! How to encourage sitting?

Hi all, my son is on day 4 of potty training. We have definitely made progress by getting a few pees in the potty, but it has only been 2-3 times and while standing. almost more like my husband and I catching it versus my son going to the potty himself, even when prompted. We have ~~too~~ really struggled with resistance from day one, like a literal feral cat when brought to the potty, so trying to back off a bit, but do we just truly let him have accidents when he goes? it has been really hard. Is there a way that we can encourage him to sit also? Or is that a battle not worth fighting? Will it come when he gets more comfy? Thanks in advance ❤️

Kenya Ramirez

19. März um 18:35

.

Dad's Potty help

We are on Day 3 of Block 1. We are doing good, each day the pee accidents become fewer and fewer, but no poop yet. Until now. I asked my husband to watch our 27m old while I cooked, and explained everything down to her cues, not to scream, panic, etc. almost finished cooking when I heard she has a pee accident, first of the day. No biggie.

Then, I hear my husband freak out and I figure it's another pee, but no it was a POOP!! We haven't had one since before day 1 when she pooped in her diaper before we started.

I'm a bit frustrated because I know her poop cue very well and I know I would've caught it in the potty. She's not an everyday pooper, maybe once every 2 days and I figure because we've started training, she held it for an extra day. I've been wanting to move to Block 2, mostly because she has started to get somewhat of a small rash on her bum. Should I continue Block 1, or move on to pants? Thank you for your help!

Anna Freeman

Advisor

Since you feel like you know her poop cue you could try moving to block 2. However if she does end up pooping in her pants, make sure you go back to bottomless again until after she successfully does it on the potty.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Clare Stahley

19. März um 18:26

My 21 month old shows signs of needing to pee but won't sit on the potty to go

Day 7- still having a ton of accidents and just peeing randomly around the house. He says "uh oh" and knows where pee should go because he's said "potty" and gone to the bathroom on the toilet before earlier in the week, but now won't ever ask to go. Do I lock us in the bathroom until he goes when he holds his crotch and does the pee pee dance? If I don't make him go, he will just go run off and pee in the house a few minutes later. He knows what to do and where to go, but he's not doing it 😞

Ericka Jensen

This is common around day 7 till about day 14 it's because they can say no it's not a bad thing it just happens. Take a deep breath if an accident happens clean it up get them to help and then say pee goes in the potty it will pass. I also found giving them something that they're comfortable with to do to distract them will help my son only ever gets tablet time when he's on the potty. At first we used his comfort cow that worked really well for that time. And warm water play will help them so that they release and then make a big happy deal of them actually going in the potty

2 Wo.

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Amanda Nicole

19. März um 16:02

We've been basically at home for two weeks. Wrote on here last week. Sometimes he goes to the potty and does the whole thing himself. Other hours of the day he's peeing everywhere, and on his sister. He will tell me after. He's commando the entire two weeks. Shorts/pants on maybe 30% of the time. Holding in poop, 3-4 days a time. Doesn't poop on the potty. He's already 31 months. Do we give up? I am beyond over it. One hour he's got it and the other it's legit like 5 pee accidents in a row. He doesn't care if he's wet and he doesn't mind cleaning up his own mess.

Britni Kipp

Is he pooping or are you saying he hasn't pooped in days? Bc holding in and needing to poop and cause challenges and accidents.

Also, chapter 13 discusses behaviors vs potty training. Do you think maybe it could be that he gets it but that it's more of needing a correction? Like too busy to go when playing so he pees while playing? Therefore needs to be removed from the playing or the toy taken away. I'm not an expert bc we are in it too but just some initial thought starters. You're doing a great job!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Stormie Rae Jarmon

19. März um 14:50

Accidents vs progress

How are we quantifying accidents? I am a single mom, I've taken Wed-Mon off in an attempt to daytime potty train my 3yo. We are on Block II, Day I and are home all day. As mentioned yesterday, he does great with pooping but is still has pee accidents (probably five today so far), I remind him pee goes in the potty and try to rush him to the potty mid-pee, but it's 50/50. His daycare's policy is to put him back in a diaper after two accidents..... I'm sure by Tuesday, he's still going to have accidents. Do I just let them put him in a diaper the rest of the day and take it off as soon as we are home?

We live far from daycare and we are on the road a lot, so I'm also not sure how / when to tackle small outings and no diaper in the car, so any advice on that is appreciated. The road we take to daycare isn't pull over and potty friendly.

I'm feeling stressed.

Jessica Malyon

For car trips and longer journeys, I'd tell my then 2.5 year old that were going to put a nappy on 'incase some wee trys to sneak out' but if he feels he needs to wee to still tell me and we'll try stop to let it go in the potty. He got that pretty well and would often say if he needed to go. We'd also go just before leaving and I'd offer him to go again on arrival.

As for accidents at nursery, if that's their policy I'd just go with it and if he ends up in a pull up/nappy you can just remove it when he's in your care again. Though I will say my son never had more that 1 accident a day at nursery even when the day before the first day back he'd had about 3/4 at home. It's all about patience and perseverance 😊

2 Wo.

Antworten

Evelyn Hope Trecarten

19. März um 14:25

Has anyone dealt with a serious sleep regression with potty training?

We're 4 weeks in and my 14 month old daughter is doing amazingly well! With that said, we've been dealing with her being up for hours throughout the night screaming, and crying, which is very unlike her. I've always been able to get her back to sleep at night with little to no effort, and now it's taking upwards of 2 1/2 hours. It's been about 2 weeks of this with no end in sight, and I'm so tired.

She's basically night trained herself, (without me intending to do so) so I've taken her to the potty when she wakes upset thinking she may have to go. She's gone sometimes, but mostly just screamed harder.

I don't see anything I can really do, but I'm hoping I'm not alone, and others have dealt with similar issues that have eventually ended?

Madison Tibke

19. März um 13:52

SOS- my son is 2.5 and we have been potty training since January. He pees and poops in the toilet but absolutely will not self initiate poop causing tons of poop accidents. We are feeling exhausted and defeated from constantly setting timers and taking him to go to the bathroom. We restarted and did no pants for 2 days and nothing changed.