

Gaby Hicks

12 Std.

Happy Easter everyone! I am new to the group as I think my 2.5 year old is finally ready to start potty training. She has been stripping down naked especially in bed when she's about to take a nap or go to sleep and ends up pooping/peeing all over her bed. She has also been having me take her into the bathroom and enjoys watching me go potty. We have ordered her a little Cocomelon potty. Any suggestions for getting started? I'm completely new to this. She is also mostly nonverbal so any additional tips on potty training with nonverbal kiddos is greatly appreciated. TIA! Pics for attention!

Jessie Critch

Aww shes adorable x

2 Std.

Antworten

Becki Gordon

2 Std.

Hi everybody thanks for the acceptance. My daughter is 13 months old and I'm going to start potty training her how has everyone else's experience been.

Yes I know she's on the younger side but she's quite advanced she knows what wee wee and poo poo is it's now trying to get her to recognise it.

Any advice welcome. Thanks

Jenna Westerink

1 Tag

My nearly 3 year old wont sit on the potty. This is our third time trying to potty train and it gets worse each time. He was fine using the potty 6 months ago but i didnt take it the whole way then because we were travelling and also weaning and i thought we should complete that first.

He knows when pee and poop is coming. He will successfully pee/poop outside. He even stays dry overnight. Ive got him bare bottomed again and just calmly taking him to the bathroom every time i go but he will scream and tantrum and refuses to even sit.

Ive tried sticker rewards, giving him choices (potty or toilet, which room), we lean hard on the "becoming a big boy" line but none of it is having an affect.

He held his pee since before bath time last night and its now 10am and still nothing. Im sure its a control thing but im lost as to how to both give him enough control to feel comfortable while still learning how to potty inside.

Update: we moved the potty outside and he sat on it to poop. Celebrated that. Next morning we put the potty outside again by his request. He surprised me by skipping it entirely and deciding to poop directly on the toilet instead. Big win. No idea how it happened.

Kendall Crane Wilkerson

Also, get some potty books. We love "once upon a potty" there's a boy and girl version. "Everyone poops" is great 10 Std.

Antworten

Alexandra De Nicola

2 Std.

Potty training advice

Hi all

I started potty training my daughter around January but what started out something I wanted to do casually found she was doing really well. Within a few days she got wees and poos on potty with my reminding. Then she would tell me when she needed to do poo and then also started pee.

Was still wearing nappies - obviously still doing some pee in nappies but 95% of poos in potty.

So we've been doing it I'd say casually and not cold turkey for 2 months now.

When we go out she'd obvs also do it in her potty.

I was a bit lazy to start her in undies so noticed past week or so she hadn't said "pee" for potty it was more routine when I'd take her she'd do it.

So I started undies this weekend concious long weekend more time with her. And she's had a few accidents in the undies but most times doesn't tell me it's as if she's too busy playing or focussed on what she's doing.

Has she regressed? I don't know.

She's been good with poos and with routine us taking her she'll get probably half pees on potty.

I'm trying not to worry about it, she'll be 2 on 17/04 so I hope we're still doing well for her age. I'm just going to continue the undies, accept the accidents, praise when she does it and hopefully she returns to letting me know when she needs to pee. Because I know she's learnt the skill and sensation she's done it many times before going pee, telling me, and waiting until we get to the potty.

Thoughts, any advice?

Lindsay Lee

• Folgen

2 Tage

Ok. My girl is on day 6 of potty training. Wasn't having much success until day 5. We've been doing "no pants". I'm nervous about sending her back to daycare because she'll have to ask to use the potty and won't be able to just go when she needs to. I'm considering keeping her home for a few extra days. Thoughts? Advice?

Anonymes Mitglied 137

I think just tell daycare and she should be able to go without asking. Also maybe tell them to prompt/ask her

1 Tag

Antworten

Katherina Abercrombie

12 Std.

My daughter has always struggled to poop. In the diaper, toilet etc. If she doesnt regularly take restorlax and even then I am starting to resort to a suppository. Shes just really struggling to poop. We've seen doctors and specialists who dont want to do anything with her age.

This is causing alot of problems trying to potty train her. She cries and screams just to wear training underwear she picked. Ive tried a couple of kinds. Ive tried stickers, blowing bubbles, playing barbies on the toilet, I have a box of kinder eggs that if she just pees or poops i would be willing to give her one. But she holds in the pee and poops now because I think she is scared to poop. I dont know how to really go forward with potty training. we start making a bit of headway and then she doesnt poop for a week and I have to give a suppository which doesnt work for 24 hours then its unpredictable pooping. If anyone has advice but I guess this is a rant too.

When she does go on the toilet she is very proud of herself. But we constantly are restarting due to the pooping struggle. Shes gone 12 days without a poop and its been a trip to the doctor and ER a few times.

Kendall Crane Wilkerson

Sorry if this is an unhelpful question, but how old and what's her diet like? We do fresh pears, plums or peaches everyday to keep things moving 11 Std.

Antworten

May Golda

1 Tag

My son is 2 years and 7 months. We're on day 3 of potty training. Day 1 was pretty good, we had only accident and 3 successful pees and two poos. Mid way through the day I could tell he started holding it and not wanting to release on the potty. Day 2 was terrible. The whole day resisting. 2 very big accidents cause he was holding it.

We're an hour into day 3 and again he's just holding it despite reaaaaally needing to go. Sits on the potty for a second and immediately wants to get up. How do we continue like this?

Sara Fairley

I did 3 days no nappy and only 2 pees in a potty pretty much a fluke and felt like she got more resistant than better. Definitely not an easy job

1 Tag

Antworten

Cheryl Magness

1 Tag

Daughter is 26 months. Been using potty regularly since 23 months (almost always for poo's too!) and has been using it/engaging with it just for fun since 18 months - so she is well aware what it all is, what it is for and has been comfortable using it.

We decided to 'go for it' this Easter Holiday and try to switch to knickers instead of nappies (by day only at this stage not overnight) especially as she is always dry through her daytime nap now.

So far it has gone as follows:

Day 1 - dry all day

Day 2 - afternoon accident

Day 3 - afternoon accident

Day 4 - dry day

Day 5 - dry day

Day 6 - morning accident

Day 7 - afternoon accident

I feel like the only way we are avoiding accidents is when we prompt her to go and her mood is good enough to comply. I feel she is rarely recognising that she needs to go and actually asking for it.

Can we crack this in the 2nd week of the hols before we (both teachers) return to work and have to send her to different people each day for childcare (meaning we can't leave it to child carers to train her for us!)??? I am worried we will have another similar week and not feel confident sending her to nursery setting her up for accidents and will end up having to resort back to nappies again 😓

Any advice on how to approach this second week would be appreciated!

Claire Louise

I'm right there with you... My LO is doing so well when she's not wearing anything but put a pair of knickers (or a nappy) on and she feels the protection so just goes in there. I tried to put her in loose clothing, like a pair of joggers with no underwear, and that works really well as she has started pulling her trousers down before going... It's early days and we have been away this weekend so not tried particularly hard, but it's a tip I would recommend and fingers crossed something works for us both!

Antworten

Megan Marcelle Klein

1 Tag

Hi everyone!!

How did you get your little one to sit on a toilet without a potty seat? Ours REFUSES and will literally hold her pee allll day instead

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Ive never really used one, how old is she?

1 Tag

Antworten

Grace Healy

1 Tag

Our first day of potty training... Does this seem about right?

Megan Gray

She is aware on the first day she is peeing and pooping. That is amazing

1 Tag

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Arianna Kootz Pyrtle

3 Tage

Okay so how are we going on road trips during potty training? Husband and I are going to visit my in laws for the weekend, it's a 6 1/2 hr car ride. We've been potty training since 18m with a 3 month break in between. She's 2 1/2 and has been in underwear for a little over a month. She's only told my husband ONE time when she had to go, other than that she doesn't tell us so we just have to guess and constantly take her potty, even asking her she's says no 99.9% of the time but still goes when I sit her on it. Everyone says wait until they're trained for long outings but obviously she isn't going to be potty trained enough for long outings for a few more months lol. Should I put her in a pull up for the trip? She doesn't tell me when she has to go and it doesn't phase her when her undies are wet. I'm just not tryna stop every hr or 2 and guess if she has to go or not 😭😭

Kayla Wilson

Can you drive overnight? Put her in a pull up like normal for overnight and have her sleep the drive?

We've been potty training for 2 months and that's how we plan to make our 8hr drive that's coming up

3 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

1 Tag

Day 2 - no nappies only u does still having accidents and barely made it in toilet. Baby girl is almost turning 3 next month.

She is doing well in other aspects but we have been trying on and off since she was 18 months.

Exposing her to toilet seats and potty everhwrr.

Role plays videos, u name it.

I feel like we are not going to be successful again until she is ready.

Feel like failure again 😞

Nikki Conway

Does she see you or anyone else go potty?

1 Tag

Antworten

Anna Ruggeri Jones

1 Tag

Hi everyone, this is my first post but I'm completely lost at what to do..

This is a video of my fresh 3 year old. He has struggled with poop aversion since getting constipated on vacation at 14 months. After exhausting all natural remedies such as prunes, fiber, pear juice, etc. we contacted his pediatrician who suggested daily MiraLax to make sure he cannot "out will" the poop.

We've considered stopping the MiraLAX as I've heard it can cause dependency, but he will quite literally hold it until it's impacted. He's currently so blistered and raw on his bottom that desitin, Bordeaux's, aquafor and A&D has not helped. We need to get him potty trained but this has been a huge hurdle to overcome before we can fully commit.

He's never been evaluated for anything but I suspect he's got adhd and/or a sensory processing thing. However, his pediatrician doesn't seem concerned and explains it as the "will of a toddler". While I can understand this, as I am an early childhood educator, but I'm worried about prolonged effects.

Thank you if you've read this far. I just don't know what else to do.

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

.

i would consult your doctor

1 Tag

Antworten

Georgie Magana

1 Tag

.

My 2 year old throws a fit most of the time when I try to put him on the potty. Ive given him a book, bubbles, and even started a sticker chart. I am lost

Emily Thompson

5 Tage

Is 5 years old too old for a Girl to wear Pull-Ups to bed?

Theresa Linton-Hubbard

No, I wet the bed until I was 12/13. I could not help it. I wish they had pull ups back then like they do now 🙄 let your baby be comfortable and not wake up cold covered in pee.

5 Tage

Antworten

Charlotte Norton

4 Tage

What's a good age to start potty training boys?

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. It's the same for both sexes. 2 1/2 is the ideal age. By then almost all children have enough expressive and receptive language to understand what is being asked of them during potty training.

4 Tage

Antworten

Claudia Pinna-Hayes

1 Tag

.

Hi all, new to this potty training and it's been very up and down.

I have boy/girl twins turning 3 in July.

Started potty training last week as my daughter stays dry quite a lot and took it upon herself to use the toilet for a wee and a poo.

Since potty training she loves to wear underwear but refuses to go potty or toilet and usually has an accident right after I tell her to she needs to sit on the potty/toilet.

My son on the other hand has been wearing underwear or pull ups and has been going potty every time I tell him and no accidents.

I'm giving rewards and using a chart but nothing seems to encourage my daughter.

Any advice I will be so happy to hear, TIA 😊

Mavi Hamza

1 Tag

My baby girl 3 years old and baby boy 4 years old they never tell me and a lot of accidents one by one .I am too exhaust and fed up today nothing gonna work for me plz tips and tricks

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

My irish twins are the same age/gender too. My son is fully potty trained my baby fears the toliet

1 Tag

Antworten

Jaida Ashley De Jesus

2 Tage

My daughter just turned 3 last month. She tells me when she pees and poops and we did a few times on the potty but now she has no interest in using the potty. Unfortunately, I live with my parents and they have carpets everywhere. I'm not sure where to go from here how can I get her to want to use the potty but not poop or pee on my parents floor

Anonymes Mitglied 545

Maybe they will be understanding? Maybe offer to do carpet cleaning for when your daughter has the hang of things?

Could also try the toilet training pants that hold some and let them feel it?

2 Tage

Antworten

Coffee,Herbs&Chaos

Admin

Top-Beteiligung

·6. Juli 2025

Here are the links to our sister groups!

The Crunchy Life \(Natural Living\)

Moms After Dark  (Unfiltered)

(the unfiltered mom group)

TheMomLife  : a group for mom support from all over the world.

A Mothers Helping Hand  : financial support

Latched \(Breastfeeding Support\): for all breastfeeding questions

Anonymous: Confessions & Discussions: debate/discussion

A Friends Helping Hand 🤝 - Co-Ed financial support

Drama Llamas\(UNFILTERED\): for our unfiltered drama

WIC&EBT Chat: for all ebt and wic questions and support

Potty Training Toddlers: for that potty training journey support

Coffee & Cannabis 🌿: for our smokers support

a group where we give TERRIBLE advice,what do?

Autism Awareness & Support

Matt Rawls

Potty training his hard

18 Wo.

Antworten

Leslie Montano

2 Tage

.

Has anyone tried Up Airy training pants ? Are they any different from the training pants that they sell at Walmart ?

sassyperuana

Get the big elephant brand on amazon, more bang for your buck

2 Tage

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·30. März um 05:35

Have you had to pause potty training because of an issue?

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. The reason needs to be substantial, since more than one pause tends to make this process take a lot longer.

If you do take a break try to take a complete one month break (or longer), as it takes littles 1-3 full months to respond to change. Put the small potty away and forget you know the word exists.

However, IF your little asks to use the small potty give in and follow their lead, as you might just catch the "Magic Window" where this process is super quick and nearly painless.

5 Tage

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·3 Tage

Moms who have potty trained boys. What did you use to keep the pee in the potty? Because I've already been peed on enough for the next 4 lifetimes 😂

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. You have him sit, push his bits down and bring his knees together. Doing this should solve most of your issue.

3 Tage

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·2 Tage

Okay, how do we talk to/cheer for our kids during potty training? Because I sound like I'm talking to my dog and I hate it 😊😂

Jaci

Sometimes that's just what it is 😂😂😂

2 Tage

Antworten

Hayley English

3 Tage

Please Help!

Attempting to toilet train my 2YO girl who has been showing lots of signs of readiness for a while however have been getting lots of defiant nos when asking or encouraging to sit on the potty & she also just doesn't really seem to care that she's wet.

This is how we have attempted:

- All week been talking about wearing knickers and practicing sitting on the potty. Throughout the week we had one poo and multiple wees. We've been reading "no more nappies" & ms Rachel's toilet training book. We've also watching ms Rachel's toilet training episode.
- Started wearing knickers today.
- Remind her she's wearing knickers and needs to use the potty or toilet every 15 mins

- Offer the potty/toilet every 30 mins or if she's showing signs of weeing/pooing.
- Make her sit on the potty at the 1 hour mark
- Encouraging stories, bubbles, moo to poo while sitting.
- We are using a treat box for when she goes and lots of praise and encouragement for even just sitting.

We have had 0 success today.

She sat once on the potty when I was tending to our other child with her knickers on and weed.

She has only sat a handful of times and I have one pair of poopy undies and at least half a dozen wet undies to wash.

Any suggestions?

We've got five days of being home and really want to get this nailed.

May Golda

30. März um 05:46

.

Did anyone skip the go naked and go straight to undies?

We are going to start potty training my son later this week and roughly planning to do the Oh Crap method. He hates being wet! If he gets his shirt wet he makes us take it off/change him ASAP.... so i actually think putting him in undies right away could be better in his case? My parents said this my sisters and I were trained back in the day.

Anonymes Mitglied 281

We skipped the naked method because I refused to clean pee and poop out of our carpet constantly 😂 but he does really well with them, the only time he has an accident is when he's pooping

1 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·2 Tage

.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·5 Tage

For those who have had their kids hide to potty, where is the weirdest place they've hidden?

Anonymes Mitglied 220

My child gets under a chair near the litter box. 😂

3 Tage

Antworten

Taylor Marshall

4 Tage

Are there any boy moms (or anyone with experience) that know good tricks for a 4 year old boy having trouble motivating to go to the potty? He often refuses to go or says he doesn't have to and still wets his pull-up. I've tried treats and rewards but ... Mehr anzeigen

FriendlyApricot1856

Take all pull-ups away. My son was the same way at 3 1/2. I decided one weekend I was throwing all the pull-ups away put them in underwear. It took about 4 days for him to catch on, but we haven't had an accident since.

I got a timer and every time it went off, I would take him and put him on the potty. I didn't ask if you had to go. I would just go put them on the pot and if he went, I would give him a fruit snack or an M&M. Make it fun for him! I even got these little stars you can throw into the potty after you go that changes the watercolor!

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

.

My daughter is four and refuses to go on potty or use toilet, used games, poems, books etc

Jessica Frances

Ah. I'm a potty training consultant and would be happy to help you! This is a pitfall that can happen sometimes, but it can be overcome.

3 Tage

Antworten

CaringLemur5930

3 Tage

.

Hi all,

My son has been brilliant at potty training (nearly age 3). He's pretty much on the potty for wees and toilet for a number two unprompted within 3 days.

He only wears a nappy for sleeping and it is quite heavy when he wakes up in the morning. How do I now move onto no nappies at night? Or is it too much, too soon to expect that?

Anonymes Mitglied 366

What potty training method worked for you because I'm struggling with my little one

3 Tage

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·3 Tage

.

Whats next if you tried the 3 day thing with no progress? Is she just not ready?

Anonymes Mitglied

10 Std.

.

Hi every one.... Am trying to train my 22 month daughter. She is aware of what is pee and poop... went two days happily for wee... but after that always saying no to visit bathroom. And show a big tantrum if I ask her to use potty or to even visit bathroom... looking for any suggestion or advice... don't know how to convince her .. thanks in advance

Anonymes Mitglied

Verfasser/in

Thanks.. I think will wait

1 Std.

Antworten

Sarah Ferguson

2 Tage

.

Does anyone have ideas on how to stop night time potty accidents? My daughter is 18 mo has been potty training since 16 months. Did well over night for the past couple months but now is constantly having accidents overnight for the last few weeks.

Sarah Ferguson hat die Kommentarfunktion für diesen Beitrag deaktiviert.

Kolleen O'Leary

She likely going through a new development or she has some new teeth forming.

1 Tag

VioletCaribou2909

3 Tage

.

A quick one...

I know night time is hormonal and I will be keeping nappies on during the night. My nearly 3yr drinks water with his dinner around 6pm, then cows milk before bedtime. How would I stop night time nappies if I keep giving him cows milk before bedtime or do I have to stop giving milk and he would likely want to pee less during night? Hope that makes sense 😊

Thanks,

Ania Travels

I read to stop giving fluids by 6pm

3 Tage

Antworten

Prètty Bláck

• Folgen

3 Tage

.

Hey everyone. How are we teaching to wipe?

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. Have your little stand, lean forward slightly and wipe with 3 different bunches of toilet paper.

Once they do, then say, "Mommy needs to check your work." With consistent repetitions they'll get it.

3 Tage

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·27. März um 14:00

What age did your little one actually start getting the hang of potty training?

BeautifulFish3431

This terrifies me seeing everyone saying 3+. Im slowly starting to potty train my 18 month old and having to do this for the next year and a half sounds like a horror movie

1 Wo.

Antworten

Brianne Nicholson

3 Tage

Any advice for a 34 month old boy who doesn't seem to recognize the need to pee?

We did the Oh Crap method with 6 days bottomless then 5 weeks commando. After 9 weeks we mostly gave up & now do a mix of underwear & pull up. He does great using the potty when we prompt before something he wants to do. But he usually doesn't want to be bothered to stop & try. We also bribed with stickers for a pee & small cars for poop— but the novelty wore off.

Megan Paris

3 Tage

Can anyone recommend foldable travel potty seat that fits a large public restroom toilet seat? All the ones I am seeing look like they would work for a residential toilet seat but I feel like it's not compatible with those big toilets at target & so on. Am I wrong ?

Anonymes Mitglied

24. März um 18:23

Is this normal?? 😬😬😬

We're on day 5 of potty training our 3 year old girl.

She's not worn nappies since Thursday.

Today is her first day at nursery since potty training.....

(We had no wee accidents at home yesterday.. poos are another story and not yet mastered 😊)

Thank you

X

BrilliantElephant9505

Gotta love a good bright horizons app 😊 ... yes this is VERY normal.. that's the staff taking her lots to the toilet.. which is great.. but means when she has visited the bathroom with them.. she has Not done a wee hence the dry visit (but they are doing a good job by logging it on the app for you to see) basically little one is holding all morning even though staff are taking her and then having accidents in the afternoon.. which can be very normal indeed.. and I wouldn't worry about the poo situation that can come later and you may end up doing a bit more washing for that. X

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

3 Tage

.

Would you use a carry potty in a store?

Potty training my LG and wondering if she wanted a wee and were in a store that doesn't have any toilets....would you use the carry potty?

Die Kommentarfunktion wurde für diesen Beitrag deaktiviert.

Kristen Leigh

I would in a public restroom stall or in my car, but not just in a store. you never know who is shopping and your child needs protection and privacy

3 Tage

Ember Rein

4 Tage

Im unsure if this is the right group to ask in but how do i go about potty training my autistic son hell be 2 on april 12th and hes high functioning and will go when put on the potty but will also go in his pull up or underwear and peeing or pooping in them and feeling it doesnt work he doesnt care.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Unfortunately I don't have any helpful advice for you. If you don't get the help you need here, please post in our sister group, you'll likely get advice in there! Autism Awareness & Support

4 Tage

Antworten

Chene Jonker

4 Tage

Hi mommies

I just want to find out I started potty training my young lady by letting her run around naked. Now a few days ago the school messaged me saying we need to stop doing that because now she's taking her clothes and cloth nappy off and running around naked at school. (For context she's turning two in May and doesn't understand running around naked is wrong) So we stopped letting her run naked and put underwear on but now she keeps having accidents and won't pee in the potty 🚽 What can I do now? Should I just take her to the potty every 5 min (she won't sit still for 5 min she'll sit max 1 min) and keep doing that until she pees?

Anonymes Mitglied 922

Doesn't sound like she's ready yet. It's OK to take a break and start again later. It took my daughter until she was three to fully potty trained and we tried it a couple of times before she really was ready.

3 Tage

Antworten

Georgina Emma-Louise

4 Tage

.

Struggling with poop training!

Help please 🙏 my youngest is 4 (5 in September) she is potty trained for a wee but will not poo on the toilet, she will poo in her knickers constantly and her nappy at night but never on a potty or toilet, she's not scared of the toilet and we have tried rewards and poo goes to Pooland, got her new toilet seats and all sorts but she's just so reluctant.

Has anyone got any tips, we are going through pants like no tomorrow. My older two never had this issue 😞

Valentina Giraldo

Could it be her fiber intake is too low?

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

I have been doing the naked method for my boy the past few days and is using the potty for wee. Question is when do I go to no nappys outside the house? And also tips on helping him do a 2 on the potty. Advice needed!

Madison Chance

When my boy started telling me he needed to pee is when we started doing underwear when out of the house!

I don't have any advice one #2 because that's what got him to start using the potty. He would literally run away when he pooped and it was a fight to change his diaper and I told him I wasn't going to fight him and he could use the big boy potty.

3 Tage

Antworten

Jaci

4 Tage

So I need some assistance lol 😂 my daughter has no problem sitting on the toilet she even comes and whines at me and runs to the door and climbs up on it and sits but then just wants to read her books or play with her toilet toys and doesn't ever actually go potty. She will want to sit there for over 15 minutes which can't possibly be good for her but she yells at me and dead weights herself if I take her off before she says all done. But then within a few minutes of being off the toilet she will pee or poop on herself and I don't know what to do so please help 😊 lol

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·4 Tage

Does anyone else feel like potty training is kind of like a therapy session for their kids? Constant reassurance, them looking for approval, denial that they don't need to go, etc? Because sometimes, that's what it feels like 😭

Natalie Sadaeva

I think toddler hood is like babysitting a friend who is tripping. Keep them calm, safe and distracted 🤪

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

Need tips for potty training a nonverbal three year old. Obviously she can't tell me she has to go. She sometimes undresses herself and sits on potty but she's usually already gone and has yet to go in the potty.

Chloée Tiffin

4 Tage

.

New to the group

Has anyone else potty trained young? My daughters 2 in May but is showing all the signs and over the past 2 days has been sitting on the potty saying 'poo poo' & 'wee wee' so we're going to start next week just looking for any advice please

Madison Chance

My son was daytime potty trained by 2!

We did the naked method and it worked well for us. He got to pick a new hot wheel car (we kept 10-15) everytime he pooped on the potty and a sticker everytime he peed. I also had a small potty so he could sit himself and not need my help

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

.

Currently training my 3.5yo by letting her run around without underwear. She knows when she has to go and runs to her potty, but already starts peeing while she's still standing up, and continues while she's turning around to sit down.

Basically the entire area around her potty gets wet, including her legs and feet 😞 Normal?

Karla Mendenhall

She probably waited too long to actually get going to the potty. Talk to her about going when she first feels that she needs to go instead of holding it until there's an accident. Also put maybe a towel under the potty or something so it's easier to clean up?

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

.

Hi, I'm a young first time mom, my daughter is almost 3. I've been struggling on how to go about potty training. Her potty is in the main bathroom, whenever I'm using the restroom she usually sits on her potty and ill explain to her "mommy's doin a pee or poo poo" she understands the whole thing. But whenever she's about to have a poo and I mention using the potty she starts crying and screaming, she prefers the nappy. I don't know how to go about it. Please help.

ExcitingSeahorse1775

Make it fun - incentivise every wee and poo. Some do it with charts, with prize after a number of wees and poos. Some give small baking choc chips as an incentive- one for wee and 2 for poo.

We personally had a dance so after every wee and poo we made a huge deal of it and did a little celebration dance - my little one loved it.

4 Tage

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·5 Tage

.

Was your child a quick learner? If not, how long did it take?

Madison Chance

We did the naked method and he took to it pretty quick! Probably a month, two for out of the house. But I kept him in just a shirt for months until he could push his pats down and pull them up

5 Tage

Antworten

Kathryn Wagner

5 Tage

.

Have any of y'all's toddlers been afraid of public toilets? My daughter is terrified of them and I think its the loud noise they make but she won't use them and has a crying fit anytime we bring her need one. What have yall done to make them not afraid of them?

Katherine Nunez

Yeah my son is scared too. Doesn't even like going into public toilets when I have to go 😬 I just have to hold it in if I'm alone with him hahah. It goes away I'm sure with age because I know I was afraid too, even now the sounds of the flushing and air dryer can be too much sometimes for myself lol

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

4 Tage

.

Regression?

So, what did everyone do when their almost 3 year old suddenly decided they don't want to go on the potty anymore? She was fully potty trained and now even the mention of the potty makes her have a complete meltdown and she'll pee on the floor or her underwear instead of the potty.

No triggering life events. She went through months of extreme poop withholding when we started potty training and, weirdly enough, two weeks ago that got better and the pee regression started.

I have tried offering rewards and I have been making her clean up her mess. Any other ideas? Will it just pass if I don't focus on it?

Thank you in advance!

Emma Rayner

Why are you having her clean up the mess? Just curious 🤔

4 Tage

Antworten

Klara Diffenbaugh

4 Tage

.

My little one likes his potty, will sit on the toilet, is interested when his dad or I use the toilet, and always wants to watch us flush the toilet.

I tried potty training, but he doesn't seem to notice when he needs to pee until it's already running down his leg so potty training has gone nowhere.

Do I just back off for a while, or is there something else I should do?

We've read potty training picture books while he does on the potty and I've even let him watch videos for toddlers potty training while on the potty. Put him on the potty in regular intervals and every time he happened to pee in the potty I cheered and gave him a treat. He even tried really hard to pee on the potty one time (got a few drops) and we cheered and rewarded him then.

Otherwise it's just been lots of laundry and cleaning up puddles.

Stacey Mackenzie

This is where we are and today while actively trying have had full on potty refusal this morning which resulted in everybody crying lol! Put him back in a pull up for my own sanity and after a few hours happily went back on the toilet to do a poo (he's happy to poo but wee is our issue and we can't do it!). I've now decided to pause and try again in a few months but continue with poo training and sitting in a morning and night.

4 Tage

Antworten

Serena Elliot

4 Tage

my 27 month old has been using potty for wees at home for the past couple of weeks (still in nappies when out and about). we've had odd accidents at home when naked but mostly she will wee on potty when prompted. from today for Easter break we are going all in with pants but she isn't telling me when she needs a wee and having accidents. yet when she's on the potty when prompted to use it she wees. I'm first time mum so all new to me! is this normal and shall we just keep going?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Serena Elliot Yes this is very normal and honestly this is the exact messy middle that nearly every toddler hits when you switch from nappies to pants. What you're seeing is not failure and it doesn't mean she isn't ready. It means she can wee on the potty when reminded but she hasn't yet learned to recognise the body signal early enough to tell you herself. Prompted wees and self initiated wees are two totally different skills and the second one always takes longer to click. Pants also feel very different to being naked so accidents often increase for a few days because they don't feel the wee start as quickly. Keep going. This is the learning stage. Stay calm, matter of fact, no big reaction, just oops wee goes in the potty and take her to sit for a moment. Prompt gently every 30 to 45 mins and especially after drinks, after meals, and before leaving a room. Watch for her signs like pausing, going quiet, holding herself, hiding, or suddenly fidgeting. When you see it, guide her quickly. You're teaching her to connect the feeling to the action. Lots of praise for sitting and trying, not just for success. If accidents feel constant, you can do a few hours bottomless again to help her reconnect the sensation, then back to pants. This back and forth is very common and really helps it click. Give it a good few days before judging progress because day one in pants is usually the worst. You're doing the right thing and this stage is part of the process, not a setback.

For a really reassuring step by step way to understand this exact phase and what to do next, The LATCH to SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE explains toddler readiness, prompting, accidents, and how to help them move from prompted to independent in a very practical mum to mum way. I found it on AMAZON and it made this part feel way less confusing and way more doable.

4 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

5 Tage

Hi mummies!!

My daughter, born in May 2023, will be turning three soon. I started potty training her when she was two. At the beginning, she was very scared of the potty—she would cry and refuse to sit on it. After a lot of effort, she slowly started to accept sitting on it.

Now there is a big improvement. In the morning, she uses the potty to pee, and at daycare she is able to sit on the toilet without crying. She even used it once there.

The only problem now is that she doesn't tell me when she needs to go. I try to take her, but often it's not the right time, and she doesn't do anything except in the morning.

How can I help her tell me when she needs to use the toilet?

Sarah Mason

In February, we trained my little girl who will be 3 in June - one of my biggest worries was that she didn't tell us when she needed. After a few accidents on day 1 and 2, she started saying 'toilet please' on day 3. I just kept saying 'remember and tell me when you need the toilet'. You'll get sick of hearing yourself ask but I think that's what worked for us! I was pleasantly surprised she took to it so quickly but kids at this age are fast learners and like to surprise us.

Good luck 😊

5 Tage

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·5 Tage

.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·6 Tage

.

Has anyone ever actually had rewards backfire? Someone told me that it backfired for them and now it has me thinking

Alex Farnsworth

Yes, it is always a meltdown for more reward. We just do praise and it works better

6 Tage

Antworten

Madison Butterworth

5 Tage

Wondering if it's time to potty train my 20 month old. She keeps ripping off her diapers even with pants on. She sits on the potty and we have books as well. She has peed in the potty but after it made a sound, she got scared and asked for a diaper and wouldn't go back on the potty that day. First time mom and just don't know what to do

Pic so we don't get lost

Aghwaritefe Glory

Madison Butterworth Oh I totally get it, this age can be tricky! Honestly, 20 months is on the early side for potty training, but some little ones are definitely showing signs already—like ripping off diapers, sitting on the potty, and showing curiosity with books. That's all super promising. The “pee sound” scare is very common; little ones can get startled by the flush or even the noise of the urine hitting the water, and it can set them back for a bit. Totally normal, don't worry.

The best thing now is gentle exposure without pressure. Let her sit on the potty fully clothed sometimes, read her potty books while she's there, and celebrate small wins, even just sitting calmly. You could also try letting her do a quick run to the potty when she asks, then keep the rest of the day relaxed with diapers. Pull-ups are great at this stage because they feel like real underwear but aren't a disaster if she has accidents. Avoid punishment or pressure, it can make the fear worse.

Most importantly, keep it playful. You can sing, read, or do a little “potty dance” when she tries. When she's ready, she'll start associating the potty with control and pride rather than fear.

For extra guidance, the LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE really is a fantastic, practical guide for first-time moms. It gives simple, realistic tips to read your child's cues, make potty time fun, and handle setbacks. Grab it on AMAZON—it really helped me see the small wins as progress rather than stress.

5 Tage

Antworten

ConfidentPassionfruit7227

30. März um 05:45

Does anyone have a child that is fine peeing on the potty, but when it comes to pooping refuses? If we mention it or trying becomes a full melt down. Then holds it till pull-up time or accidents.

Anonymes Mitglied 813

We have had the same problem with my 2 and half year old.

It has been a struggle with poos but we just kept trying.

Reading a Miss Rachel book on toilet training has helped and referring to that, being positive if he did it in his undies - saying Thats ok, we can try again on the toilet.

It did take weeks. Then we started rewarded for poos not wees etc and heaps of praise like high fives. Also praising if he did one at daycare, we chat in the car about that and how to do it at home.

Special toys for toilet use like fridget toys and making him feel comfortable even though its hard.

It does get easy but it is hard and frustrating at first.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·6 Tage

.

What would say is the hardest part about potty training?

Caitlin Maree Williams

When they use it as an excuse to get out of going to bed!!!!

5 Tage

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

5 Tage

Do you use a step stool? i think my kids like to try to use it more for naughty behavior versus hygiene.

Aghwaritefe Glory

Dria Bartel Oh I feel that! Step stools are such a double-edged sword. Some toddlers see them as a ticket to independence,, like climbing up to wash their hands or brush teeth, while other times it's basically a trampoline or launchpad for mischief 😂. A few tricks that help: having a sturdy, non-slip stool that's just their height so they can reach the sink or potty without wobbling, and making it part of the routine rather than a "fun toy." Like, "step up, wash hands, step down, done" every time, it helps them connect the stool with the task, not playtime.

If your LO is using it mostly to be cheeky, sometimes just holding the routine and staying calm works best. You can also keep a stool just for the sink and another one away from things they shouldn't climb, it creates a bit of separation between "tool for hygiene" and "fun toy."

For a really helpful guide on these little independence tricks, The Latch to Spoon System Method by Alice Whitmore gives amazing practical tips for toddler routines, mealtimes, and even potty prep. It's on AMAZON and really breaks down these small wins in a gentle, realistic way.

5 Tage

Antworten

Keshia House

6 Tage

My 3 yr old will not poop in the potty for nothing. He wears underwear and when he has to go poop he will pull the underwear off and put on a pull up. I took the pull-ups away and he tried to hold it in but ended up going in his underwear. Any advice would be greatly appreciated.

Martin Wanczura

how about... giving him the pullup

6 Tage

Antworten

Arieanna Smith

5 Tage

My daughter is 2 and was doing great potty training then after about a month and a half of her using the potty she started having accidents none stop any advice? I've tried the 15 minute timer and everything and nothing it working

Aghwaritefe Glory

Arieanna Smith This is way more common than people talk about and it honestly feels so defeating when it happens because you think we were past this stage already. A regression after a good stretch of success usually is not stubbornness and not forgetting how to use the potty. It is almost always something emotional, physical, or routine related that changed for her without it being obvious to you. At two years old they are still very little and one tiny shift like teething, constipation, a growth spurt, change in routine, new stress, even you being busier can make them lose focus on body signals.

The biggest thing that helps here is to remove pressure completely for a bit. Timers every fifteen minutes can actually make it worse because she starts to feel watched and controlled and then avoids it. Go back to super relaxed reminders like we will try potty before snack and before bath. No constant asking. No big reactions to accidents. Very calm clean up and move on. Praise when she goes but keep it low key.

Also quietly check for constipation because even slightly hard poop can make kids avoid the potty without saying it hurts. Offer more water, fruits like pear, and see if that changes anything. Sometimes the body discomfort is the hidden reason.

THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD BY ALICE WHITEMORE talks about how toddler body awareness and control is still developing and how backing off pressure is often what resets progress. I read it on AMAZON during our own regression and it helped me change my approach and things slowly clicked again.

5 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

5 Tage

-

My 3 year old is brilliant with the potty when going full commando, but has accidents all the time (wees/poos).

Any advise please?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member This is such a common stage and honestly it usually means your little one is very close, not failing. When kids are perfect commando but have accidents the second clothes come back on, it's almost never a potty skill problem. It's a sensation and association problem. Bare bum lets them feel every signal from their body. Pants or trousers dull that feeling just enough that their brain slips back into the old diaper habit without them even realizing it.

The trick is to bridge that gap slowly instead of jumping straight from naked to fully dressed. Start with loose shorts or a dress with nothing underneath so airflow and sensation are still there. Once that's going well for a day or two, add very loose underwear. Tight pants and snug knickers feel too much like a diaper and confuse their body memory.

You can also increase potty timing for a few days. Take them after waking, after meals, before going out, before bed, and gently remind in between. Not nagging, just casual reminders so the habit forms with clothes on. Watch closely for their cues again like you did during commando days.

Another big help is getting them involved. Let them help pull pants down fast, choose their underwear, and practice "quick down, quick sit" as a little game. Make it playful so their brain links clothes with rushing to the potty instead of relaxing and going in them.

Stay super calm with accidents. Just a simple "wee goes in the potty" and move on. No big reactions. This phase usually lasts a few days to a couple of weeks while their body relearns the signals with fabric on.

A book that helped me understand this exact stage is the LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE . It explains the commando to clothes transition so clearly and gave me practical tweaks that worked fast. I found it on AMAZON and it really helped me feel less frustrated and more confident about what was happening.

5 Tage

Antworten

Chantelle Baker-Marsh

5 Tage

-

Hi everyone,

My son is 3 this month and we haven't started to actively potty train yet, we were following his lead for introduction to the toilet. We have just introduced a rewards sticker chart which he loves.

I'm just after some tips and tricks for successful active potty training.

Please don't come at me for waiting until now to do it, his sister is 5 months old so we thought we'd wait until he'd adjusted to having a sibling.

Anonymes Mitglied 509

My son is turning 3 at the end of this month, we started maybe when he was just over 2.5 .

we do a reward system depending on what he is wanting at the time - a special marshmallow or a hot wheels car.

He can now let us know when he needs to go and not expect a reward, however doing number 2s is still a work in progress.

This took a while! But I found with him being in daycare and noticing other kids going to the toilet he was curious in that way.

5 Tage

Antworten

Sarah Myers-Allison

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

28. März um 19:13

How is it going with potty training? Where are you struggling at??

Anonymes Mitglied 290

How to poo in the potty

1 Wo.

Antworten

Jenna Kallaste

5 Tage

Recommendations on readiness and techniques?

I have a 23m girl who has been showing interesting in going on the toilet for a few months now. Not consistent, but if she sees me go she wants to also and now and then randomly asked to. She sometimes but not always tells us when shes soiled herself, she does say yes or no if we ask so can tell when shes gone.

We have everything to train and a long weekend coming up, but we will need to leave the house on 3 occasions over 4 days.

Wondering if we should wait til shes older and telling us consistently when she needs to go, and a time where we dont need to leave home?

I feel like she seems ready but not sure if i should be looking at other factors and what best method would be

Thankyou 😊

Megan Gray

If you are telling yourself she is ready, she is. You know her best. Based off what what you are saying it sounds like she is. I definitely understand the timing might not be the best

5 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

5 Tage

Hello! I've been kinda sort potty training my toddler who's 2 off and on for a couple months. He has pooped in the potty plenty of times with no issues! He wasn't peeing though. A couple weeks ago I went on a trip without him for a couple days and when I got back he switched. He will now pee on the potty but will not poop on the potty OR in his diaper. I thought maybe he was constipated so I've done dates bars, apple sauce, water, juice, leg kicks, added extra fiber to his diet and he still won't. I'm thinking at this point he's scared to go? His bottom is pretty sore from when he gets the urge he holds it back but some tiny tiny bit comes out so everytime that happens, obviously clean him up and at this point, doing that 6 times a day his bottom is sore. I've been applying diaper rash cream and aquaphor and it gets better but then we go thru the same cycle everyday with not being able to poop.

Jennifer Döffels

Hiya try half a cup of pure prune juice every two days and follow by half a cup of water. Works wonder for my girl as she suffers with constipation. If he wouldnt drink it like this give it in a syringe. That's what i have to do while she is watching something she loves i kinda syringe fed her the juice and after the water to make sure she takes everything in . Hopefully he be ok soon

5 Tage

Antworten

Cami Woodstock

6 Tage

.

We have started off by having potty in nearly every room and now before a bath or new nappy we will sit him on the potty - with the aim of keeping him sat down (as I've read here that keeping them on it can be an issue.) also when I hv a wee I'll sit him on the potty at the same time.

He's started having wee's and now poo's when he's sat down - does this sound like a good start? We haven't yet mentioned anything about telling us when he needs to go, or sitting on the potty when he needs to go. Is this a good next step? He doesn't seem to hv much awareness yet of needing to go.

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. Consistent self-initiation is the very last stage of potty training. For loads of kiddos it doesn't cement itself until their first year of real schooling (ages 5-6).

You're doing the right thing. Keep going!

5 Tage

Antworten

Azaria J Mort

• Folgen

6 Tage

.

I am looking for a bit of advice my boy is 3 years and has not interested in potty training he in school , is there any pointers or hints and tips that people could help me with him he tells me when he needs to go and when he's wet but I just don't know where I am going wrong

Aghwaritefe Glory

Azaria J Mort Ahhh I hear you, this is such a common struggle and honestly it doesn't mean you're doing anything wrong. At 3 years old, a lot of kids can notice when they need to go, like your boy does, but actually doing it on the potty is a whole different skill, it's about body control, confidence, and sometimes even fear of the potty itself. The fact that he tells you when he's wet or needs to poo is huge progress, it means he knows his body signals, it's just the next step that's tricky.

Some things that really help are keeping the routine gentle and consistent. Short, relaxed potty sits a few times a day, after meals, before bath, or when you go yourself—without pressure. Celebrate the sitting even if nothing comes out, and keep the mood light and fun. Reading a silly potty book, letting him pick underwear with his favourite characters, or even just sitting with a toy nearby can make it less intimidating. Avoid punishments or bribes, they rarely work if he's not internally motivated yet. Also, make sure poops are soft and easy to pass, because if it hurts, kids dig their heels in even more.

Patience is key—some kids just need more time for confidence and control. Eventually, most kids click when their body feels ready and the routine feels safe. Alice Whitmore's The LATCH to SPOON SYSTEM METHOD explains this perfectly, with tips for kids who know their body signals but aren't motivated yet, plus how to keep routines stress-free and consistent. I grabbed it on AMAZON and it really helped me stop stressing and just trust that he'll get it when he's ready.

5 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

Hey mums,

I'm looking for some advice. Our girl recently decided she wanted to start potty training, and it initially went really well. She was going on her own when she needed to.

However, when she's at daycare, she refuses to use the toilet there and keeps saying no. She doesn't even want to get close to it. The educators suggested that I try taking her in to show her it's okay, but she just clings to me and refuses.

Has anyone experienced something similar or have any tips on how we can help her feel more comfortable using the toilet at daycare? It feels like we've hit a bit of a speed bump, which is okay

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member This is suuuper common and honestly says way more about how smart and aware she is than anything going wrong. Kids don't see toilets as all the same. The toilet at home feels safe, familiar, predictable. The toilet at daycare feels loud, echoey, different smell, different seat, no privacy. To her it is basically a whole new skill in a whole new place and that can feel scary even if she was doing amazing at home.

What helps most is removing pressure at daycare and building comfort instead of trying to force a pee. Let her visit the bathroom there with absolutely no expectation. She can walk in, flush, wash hands, play with the seat, and leave. That is a win. If she won't even go near it, start even smaller , stand at the doorway, give a smile, high five, leave. The goal is safety, not success.

See if daycare can have one consistent educator as her "potty buddy" so it's the same calm face each time. Familiar people make unfamiliar spaces less scary. If possible, bring her potty seat from home so the toilet feels a bit more like hers. Some kids relax when they're allowed to sit fully clothed at first — that takes the pressure off and lets the body relax.

At home you can role-play daycare bathroom visits with dolls and toys too — letting her direct the play. Kids process fear through play much more easily than through talking. Also avoid asking her if she needs to go at daycare. Statements like it's potty time work way better because there's no power struggle.

For practical, encouraging tips on potty training and handling these bumps without stress, I really liked THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD BY ALICE WHITEMORE. Even though it's focused on feeding, the way it explains developmental readiness, confidence building, and low pressure transitions helped me think about potty training in a way that felt calm and doable instead of a power struggle. I found it on AMAZON and it honestly made me way more confident when tackling stages like this with my toddler.

5 Tage

Antworten

LivelyPelican3392

6 Tage

My daughter will be three in August. We have potties in the house. Occasionally she will say she 'needs the toilet' - I encourage her to the potty, she sits down for two seconds then back up, not doing anything. Should I take the plunge and stop nappies completely or is it too early? She was late reaching milestones (crawling, walking) so I'm not surprised we're not there yet.

I work 12 hour shifts, 4 on 4 off, and family look after her when nursery isn't open, so it's difficult to stick to a routine and make sure others are too. We also need to stop the thumb sucking, and weaning back onto dairy.

RelaxingFlamingo8579

I'll be following this. My daughter just turned 3 this month; she was doing really well weeing on potty and toilet then had an accident at preschool (both wee and poo 🧑) and it upset her so deeply she has refused pants since. I don't know what's the best answer so look forward to other people's suggestions here. But I'm glad there's someone else who hasn't weaned yet either! 😬

6 Tage

Antworten

LovelyBlueberry6936

28. März um 22:09

What kind of rewards after going potty would you give a 20 month old? Stickers are a no.

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. Rewards are entirely counterproductive UNLESS you have an older kiddo on the spectrum. The vast majority of kids will turn their noses up at a reward quite quickly.

1 Wo.

Antworten

JoyfulCamel266

30. März um 14:15

•

Poos on potty!

My sons been potty training for over a month now

Still has some accidents (especially at home - almost like he is too busy or being lazy!)

The main issue is he will only poo in a nappy or pants. I've tried encouraging him to sit on the potty etc but he says no.

He went through a phase where he was holding poos as he was too frightened to go so I do not want him to revert back to that stage, but how long may it take to crack it? I feel like we're just letting him poo in a nappy and making no progress. Is that standard ?? I know poos are trickier for potty training

Helen Hankin

People will think im mother satan but my son was exactly the same and the only thing that worked was saying he would get a surprise if he pood on the toilet. So now if he has a poo he gets a small cupcake 🍰 but it worked! No accidents in 6 days and poos and wees on the toilet. Before anyone jumps on me my kids eat very healthy all throughout the day and this is a one off for a poo! Do what you need to do to get it to work. He won't be asking for cupcakes when he's 16 so no harm done 👍

6 Tage

Antworten

Samantha Turpin

6 Tage

My daughter is almost 26 months and we have been thinking of putting her in preschool in the fall. However, she'll need potty trained first. What is your best trick to potty train?? We've lightly introduced the potty chair and she has used it but I just want all the advice! Do we use pull-ups? Underwear??

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

3 year old.. taking a break.. wee on toilet.. what to do now!?

I'm so confused!!

We've just put our 3 year old back in nappies after 1.5 weeks of potty training.

For the initial 4 days at home she made progress and by the 4th day, had all wees on the potty.

She was then at nursery on day 5 and since then didn't go on the potty once. She'd sit on there, but not do anything.. and then have an accident in her knickers within 5 mins.

This carried on at home too and started to refuse to sit on the potty at all.

We thought taking a break may be best and she herself chose to wear nappies again.

We went to a dance class today and she told me she wanted to go to the toilet (wearing a nappy).

I lifted her onto the toilet and she did a wee..... And had a dry nappy..

What does this mean I should do?! So confused 🤔🤔🤔🤔

Thanks for reading my essay!

X

CopperFrog1223

We treat potty training like learning to eat. In the early months its messy and unpredictable- but as baby gets used to it, its less mess and you learn their eating habits.

6 Tage

Antworten

Katherine Nunez

6 Tage

.

Okay I need advice on CLEANING the accidents.

The floor is easy, but it's happened on the couch and our bed. Thankfully the bed I just washed the sheets as it didn't soak through but the COUCH 😬😬 I have one of those vacuums that spray out cleaning solution so you can scrub and soak everything up which has worked decent but I swear the smell still lingers. I have put plastic sheets, or bathroom mats under my son as I'm training him and it helps but he moves and jumps around without me seeing at times and sits somewhere else then has an accident.

Anyone recommend a good cleaning solution? I feel like I've tried everything from watered down pinesol, a vinegar/baking soda mix, flouring baking soda on the dry couch to deodorize it (I read it online) I'm out of options I'm ready to throw the couch outside the window. I can't replace them because honestly they're only 3 years old and I can't afford a whole new couch.

Help. 😞

Jaci

You need the pet resolve cleaner the urine dissolver solution for the couch and make sure you use enough of it for it to work and they have water proof covers you can put over the whole couch they are typically marketed for pets that pee on the couch but they work great for this lol 😂

6 Tage

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

Hi all

We are going to attempt potty training within the next few days, my son will be turning 2, he is tomorrow be on half term from Wednesday for a week and a half

We have a travel potty and also an in house potty,

What do I need to know?

Any tips and tricks?

How do I reinforce it when he goes back to nursery?

He has speech delay so is unable to communicate when he needs to go toilet

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. Keep him naked from the waist down. Catch his wees in a small potty you keep nearby.

Watch him like a hawk and don't plan on leaving the house until he's had a number of successes. When you do pop some shorts on him and go on a 5 min walkabout outside. Slowly increase outside time, but only go after a successful wee.

Learn the signs for wee and poo and use the right one every time he's going.

Give it a full week and see how he does. With a speech delay you may need to shelve this for another year. It just depends upon how he takes to it and how good his non-verbal communication is.

6 Tage

Antworten

ExcitingCelery3544

6 Tage

.

My baby turns 19months in 6 days and we've been doing lazy EC since she was 5 months old.

We used to catch pees and pretty much during transitions (after nap,after meals , after coming home etc) and poops almost 95% of the time.But for the last 2 months, she refuses to pee in the toilet. I have done 2 days of naked time and she would not pee and hold till I put on a diaper.

she is good at clutching her diaper before going to poop and sitting and pooping, so I know she's ready to potty train. But I don't know how to train her to pee in the potty.

We still have a little potty seat for her where she sits by herself and reads a potty book or plays with toys when asked to. But she won't pee on it and will pee immediately after I put a diaper on.

When she poops in her little potty, she loves to open the toilet lid and I put her poop in the toilet and we flush and clap together.

She knows where pee and poop go but I'm out of ideas to make her pee in her potty.

I've bought her padded underwear but not tried that.

any ideas?

Jessica Frances

I haven't had that many EC potty training clients, but my experience has shown me that EC makes true potty training harder.

Under 12 months they have zero control over their bowels.

EC trains the adult to pay attention to their kiddo's bodily functions. It doesn't actually train the kiddo at all.

6 Tage

Antworten

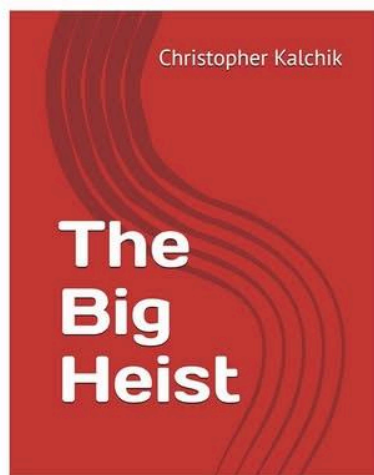

Christopher Winn Kalchik

▪ Folgen

6 Tage

Who else likes a good book? I invite you to purchase mine and get ready for a great read!... Mehr anzeigen amazon.com

The Big Heist (The Big Heist series)

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

Started potty training

Started potty training today. We tried training pants which he was really excited about as he's wanted to wear pants for a while. Sat on the potty/toilet multiple times but nothing. Nap time nappy was dry but wet 2 lots of pants and soiled another. Going to try again tomorrow but wondered opinions if he's ready or not? We didn't start the training until about 11ish today due to an appointment but going to try from wake up tomorrow. Any advice would be appreciated?

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

.

Hi, so my little girl has just turned 3 and over the Easter break I am trying to get her potty trained. When she has no bottoms or underwear on she sits on the potty and wees. But if she has any underwear or bottoms on she will sit on the potty but does not pull trousers/underwear down and will just we through them. If I am fast enough and see I can quickly pull her bottoms down. Any tips on how to get her to understand pulling her pants/ trousers down? Thanks

Devon Wallach

28. März um 22:09

.

Frustrated. It's technically the first day of potty training at home. She's been doing it at daycare and has been pretty perfect. At home she fights to sit on the potty, I'm always missing when she goes and questioning when to take her. I have to tell myself it's day 1 but I was hoping since she does so well at daycare it'll be easier.

Kristen Leigh

ask the daycare what their system is there since she is successful there and try to do the same at home!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Sarah Myers-Allison

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·27. März um 03:48

.

I feel like I'm failing with potty training my toddler 🥹🥹

YaYa Looper

Honestly I feel this way too .. my son is doing good with pee but will not poop in the toilet. It's so difficult.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

6 Tage

.

They are 26 mths

I have potty trained probably 100 kids. Lol

They pee on the toilet, no problem! Basically dry all day. 🎉

My problem - my kids decide to poop during nap time. In their diapers. 😞

When they sit on the toilet - they toot into the toilet and push - you can hear the gas release. 😂

I have done everything that i ask parents to do and that I know works - BUT im too close to this.

And i am failing.

Emma Mounter

My lo, 3 in June only the last month and a half twiggged pooing in the toilet/potty. She would hold on and make herself constipated. She would only go in a nappy. Then on her underwear. But now till go in the toilet.

6 Tage

Antworten

Rylee Buscaglio

30. März um 05:45

.

I dont know what to do anymore, My daughter is 3 and she fully understands the toilet and is aware of when she goes potty. She just picks and chooses sometimes she will tell me she needs to potty even when we are out and then other times she will wait until shes already gone and then comes up to me and tells me she went and that I need to change her. I have tried going completely naked, I have tried pull ups and I have tried potty training underwear. No matter what she doesn't care. I have tried the going every 20 minutes and sitting for 2-5 minutes waiting to go and then she will go as soon as we get up. I have tried bribery with candy each time she goes, or ice cream at the end of the day or a toy at the end of the week. Literally nothing is working and I don't know what to do!!

I just hate seeing posts when people say oh if your two year isnt potty trained you are just a negligent parent. But I am trying EVERYTHING 😭

Saadia Hassam

Firstly, not negligent at all. Both my boys trained around 3.5yr old. Each child is different.

Maybe taking a break might help?

My experience

Child 1 really got the rewards etc. Child 2 found it too much pressure.

Also choosing a method and sticking to it helped us

1 Wo.

Antworten

Bea Simagala

6 Tage

Hi everyone 😊

Looking for some tips on potty training my 3 year old daughter (turning 4 in May) who is autistic and currently non-verbal (but her speech is coming along quickly now).

We waited until we felt she was ready before starting. Her NHS SaLT mentioned she may be a Gestalt Language Processor. She LOVES singing especially nursery rhymes and YouTube videos (she's really into the Ms Rachel potty song at the moment!).

Today was our Day 1. We started with knickers, but she had a wee accident after breakfast and a small poo smear before lunch, so we switched to commando at home.

We then put on the Ms Rachel potty video and she got really engaged. She did a wee on the potty, and about 10 minutes later she independently went and did a poo in the potty too! She's also started doing pretend play by putting her toys on the potty.

I'm really happy with how today went, but my main question is:

How do I help her communicate that she needs the potty?

At the moment she doesn't tell me before going. I'd love to help her let me know "wee" or "poo" (in whatever way works for her).

Any advice, especially from parents of autistic children or GLPs, would be really appreciated 🧡

Tabitha Everson

30. März um 14:15

.

So my 2 1/2 year old shows interest in the potty but will not use it, when he starts pooping he goes to the potty sits for a second and gets up. Any suggestions/advice?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Tabitha Everson Ahh this stage is so common at two and a half, and honestly it can feel sooo confusing because they look ready but then refuse to actually do the thing when it matters. What you're seeing is actually a really good sign. Him going to the potty when he feels the poop starting means his body awareness is there, which is huge. The part that's missing isn't readiness, it's confidence and comfort with releasing on the potty. For a lot of toddlers, poop feels scary to let go of in a new place. It feels like part of them, warm, familiar, and they don't trust the potty yet. So they sit for a second, panic a lil, and hop off. Totally normal at this age. What helps is taking all pressure off the moment and focusing on routine. Sit him on the potty at the same times every day, especially after meals when the body naturally wants to go, and don't wait for him to already be mid poop. Read a book, sing, make it relaxed so the potty feels boring and safe, not a big deal. If he gets up, that's fine, no reaction, just try again later. You can also let him poop in his nappy while sitting on the potty for a few days so his brain connects the feeling of pooping with being on the potty without the fear of letting go. Then slowly move to cutting a hole in the nappy, then no nappy. This gentle bridge works wonders.

A lot of this approach comes from The LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE really even though it's known for feeding stages, it talks sooo well about body readiness, confidence building, and how toddlers learn new body skills without pressure. I used ideas from it during this exact poop phase and it changed everything for us. It explains why forcing or bribing actually makes them hold it more, and how calm repetition builds trust instead. You can find it on AMAZON and honestly it gives that reassurance that this phase is a process, not a problem. You're right on track, he's closer than it looks, he just needs to feel safe enough to let go.

1 Wo.

Antworten
Bearbeitet

RelaxingPeacock3328

28. März um 23:57

.

I never know when he wants to go

My son is 2 1/2. I never know when he needs to go or is about to. My daughter was easy she showed signs, but my son nothing. I have no idea. I'm finding it hard trying to get him to make the connection. I don't want to take him hourly, I did that one day and it worked but put him off wanting to go to the toilet so have given him a break and wanting now to try something else. But I don't know how when I can't tell when he needs to go.

Btw he isn't speaking many words yet, just had grommets done this week, so getting him to tell me isn't much of an option yet.

Any tips or advice??

sassyperuana

If hourly was too much try every 2 hours or less if that's still too much and at predictable times like first wake up, before bed, and 20ish mins after eating. He needs to get used to the process more and feel more comfortable with it before he starts to make connections and give you signs

1 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·30. März um 15:00

·

Anonymes Mitglied

29. März um 17:39

·

How many people have successfully potty trained at 18 months? She was telling us before doing wee/poos in her nappy and would then go and do it so she is aware and does show interest when me or my partner use the toilet. If so please can I have some advise. Its like she is now unaware when she needs to go

ThrillingPeapod1184

Started at 17 months, went awfully, questioned every day whether she was ready but we've now basically cracked it at just past 18 months with some days at no accidents and some with just one accident. Keep going!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·30. März um 07:40

·

the less dsiapers we use the more versitle ive learned wipes can be. lol.

Farraz A Khalid

·Folgen

29. März um 20:33

I need HELP.

My 3 year old takes her diaper off during every single nap and pees in her bed. Like every single day, sometimes twice during that nap period. She'll just get naked and pee on the bed, and she proudly shows me when I go in to get her. I'm working on potty training her. Why is she doing that?? I can't put the potty seat in the room with her because I know she's just going to play with it and spill pee on the floor. I'm going to start putting her in sleepers backwards so she can't unzip it, but WHYYYYY on earth does she do it? I can't stand it, it genuinely ruins my mood for the day. Like am I washing her bedding on a daily basis 🤦‍♀️

Editing to add- her mattress is waterproof so I'm not worried about that

Jenn Hall

Watch fluid intake and practice every 60-90 mins Potty her before naps and wake her up to potty, she sounds ready just needs to signal the sensation to action.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Mavi Hamza

29. März um 21:57

My baby boy is 4.2 years old he refused to sit on potty training seat he never tell ne he has a speech delay problem so he doesn't tell me I am sick of social pressure .everyone around me trained their children at 24 month, 36 month he refused to tell only comfortable with diapers

Jamie Cyrynowski

You are absolutely not alone in this, and you're not doing anything wrong 🧡 especially with a speech delay, potty training can take longer and needs a slightly different approach.

First, try to take some pressure off yourself — 4 is not too late, even though it feels that way with social pressure.

Since he isn't telling you, focus less on him communicating and more on routine + visuals:

- Take him at consistent times (wake up, after meals, before bed)

- Use simple, consistent words or even a visual cue/sign every time (like saying “potty time” + pointing)
- You can also try a picture chart so he can point instead of saying it

If he's only comfortable in diapers, you can bridge it instead of forcing a jump:

- Let him poop in a diaper but in the bathroom
- Then gradually move to diaper on while sitting on the potty
- Then slowly cut a hole / transition off the diaper over time

Also, a potty seat vs. big toilet can make a big difference if he feels unsure — and making sure his feet are supported helps a lot.

Most important: keep it calm and low pressure. Kids who feel pressured tend to resist more, especially when communication is harder for them.

You're doing your best, and he will get there — just on his timeline, not everyone else's

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

30. März um 00:05

Hi i would like to know if there are any mom who experienced the same. My 18mos daughter don't like to say the word potty or even ask for our attention if she wants to potty. She pee and poop in the potty very well, but there should be something offered for her to sit, like reading books or playing a toy. Sometimes she doesn't want to sit ,but it is so seldom f0r her to protest. My question how did you make your lo tell you that she wants to go? Because rn mine do not tell us, she well just pee or poop in her undies if we fail to put her in the potty. Sometimes she will sits on her own but it seldom happened. And sometimes she will just use the potty as her chair to red books. Rn idk what to do. Any suggestions from other moms out there. Thanks ❤️

Anonymes Mitglied 382

You need to watch her body language, she's still very young to understand when she needs to go herself.

You're doing everything right, even down to offering her a toy or book to entice her to the potty.

Anonymes Mitglied

30. März um 00:06

-

Potty training my 2 year old girl.

So...we havent started potty straining properly yet. However....she has been going to the potty with her childminder...asking to go, and peeing in potty too. She hasnt been interested in doing that at home, but we are starting this tomorrow.

Ill be staying at home and leaving her nappy/knickers free all day and encourage her to sit on potty every 20/30 mins.

I have been reading about potty training online & it says when we do start to stay in for a few days which I completely understand and thats what I want to do & states to not put her back in a pull up if were going out...use puppy pads dor car seat, taje a carry potty ect insteadm. However....she is booked to go to the childminder tuesday and Wednesday. Im quite stuck on knowing what to put her in...pull up...or training pants or what?

With wearing pull ups, they dont feel that they have wee'd so it doesnt show consistency.

Any advice if greatly appreciated.

Stacey Mackenzie

29. März um 20:34

-

I have started official potty training after preparing him for it since late January. We are on day 1 (but only started at 2pm as was out in the AM). We originally started naked but after a few hours realised this wasn't right for him as he was having accidents when he wouldn't usually, put him in training pants (upairy) and we've had a couple of wet dribbles but not soaked and a few wees on the potty. We have a timer that goes off every 30 minutes, he gets a chocolate every time he sits and a sweetie (jelly tot) when he goes. We are doing the same for a few days but do we just extend the time between? How do others do it?

Bryony Quick

29. März um 20:34

We are on day 6 no Nappies.

On day 6 no nappies, day 3,4 went amazing only 1 accident all day, on both days. He was so keen and excited. But yesterday and today we had more accidents then going to the potty/toilet. And just refusing to sit on it.

On the positive he now says when he was wet and says uh ow.

Please say this is a blip and will get over this.

Anonymes Mitglied

25. März um 04:28

Any tips are greatly appreciated. We are potty training my son and we were making slow progress but still progress. My mother in law watched him one evening and after that day he won't step foot in the bathroom and the mention of it has him screaming and running away. I suspect that she forced him on the potty which I know is a big no no in the potty training world. How do I get him back on track and get potty trained?

Amanda Camilleri

Hello mama. Potty training can be a very stressful time. I know it was for us. I was in tears and had to get professional guidance on potty training.

I remember going through this exact problem and till this day I cannot understand what triggered it. She had passed urine and poo once and never wanted to go back on the potty. I had given her a break for a few months, then tried again. She was still scared and screaming but when she managed 10 seconds sitting on it she was then ok

1 Wo.

Antworten

Rebecca Owen

29. März um 15:20

.

Hi all 🙌

I'm slightly lost at what else to do, my son was 2 in January and he is showing signs of starting potty training. He's taking his nappy off, telling me when he's done a poo in his nappy ect. When it comes to actually sitting on the toilet and doing anything he has no interest. I give praise and make up toilet songs just for sitting on the toilet but none of it is working. I will take his nappy off and leave him with no nappy or make a huge fuss about how good his 'big boy pants' are but he will just hide and wee in them. I take him to the toilet every 15 minutes or keep reminding him to use the toilet but he will just say no and run away.

Any tip would be great!

I have a 5 year old girl who was potty trained just before she was 2 and found it so easy so I think I'm probably comparing them. Should I keep trying with other methods or leave him be and he will do it when he's ready?

Thank you, if you've read this far 🙏

StressedMama88

Try sticker charts, small rewards, and give them drinks and make them sit on the potty while drinking. My child is 4 now, and she is finally making a break through! It's definitely trial and error, especially because every kid is different.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lebogang Sekhula

28. März um 22:09

Hello guys I don't think we are winning 😭 he's turning 3 next month, he only get it right doing number 1 but number 2 on his pants 🍑😭😭

Anonymes Mitglied 779

Same to my daughter she will be 3 one June my boys were easy but this girl is not easy

1 Wo.

Antworten

Sarah Myers-Allison

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

28. März um 15:00

What method for potty training worked for you??

Susie Crawford

i let me child tell me when he was ready didn't pressure at all just left potty out all the time and always had pants in his drawer so he would see but no pressure one day he woke up and said "i'm too big for nappies" and that was it he was 3years 3 months and i can count on my hand how many accidents we had in the first couple weeks really worked for us

1 Wo.

Antworten

Coffee,Herbs&Chaos

Admin

Top-Beteiligung

·29. März um 16:15

Our sister group Moms After Dark has been shut down by Facebook! If you would like to, please join our back up group here Moms After Dark  (Unfiltered) Backup  Mom's only

Coffee,Herbs&Chaos

Verfasser/in

Admin

Top-Beteiligung

@everyone

1 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·27. März um 17:27

·

How old was you LO when they started waking up dry? Mine is sometimes waking up dry but we haven't started potty training yet so is this a sign to start?

Anonymes Mitglied 526

My son was waking up dry most mornings at 18 months, but I thought it was too early to start potty training n wanted to wait until his language was better so he could actually understand what was happening n what I was telling him lol. He's now just turned 3 but definitely not waking up dry so going to train him as soon as weather is better so can do most of it in the garden haha x

1 Wo.

Antworten

PositiveKangaroo2063

28. März um 23:56

.

My strong willed 3 year old is potty trained but here's the twist... she only will go on the big toilet at daycare. It doesn't matter if she has undies on, she'll pee without announcing she has to go but does at daycare 🙄 idk what to do

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Is daycare doing anything different than you are? I'd ask them what they're doing and then try that at home

1 Wo.

Antworten

Courtney Mangan

28. März um 19:07

How have others managed with one parent having a really chaotic work schedule and having more potty accidents when they are home?

Context; I am my 17 mo olds primary care taker. My spouse is a medial resident. When its just my daughter and myself she was doing SO well with potty training with very minimal accidents. My spouse is him today after having limited interaction with my daughter. She pooped for me in the morning (small). Wh... Mehr anzeigen

BravePassionfruit6937

I find at potty training ages until over a year trained it's not about your child paying attention it's about the parents watching for tells and encouraging them to sit on the potty if they're wiggling or pulling at pants or whatever your child's tell is. Mine hides in corners or gets very quiet.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

28. März um 19:07

Any advice for ADHD mom who potty trains her ADHD 3yo son? 😊

(english not my first language)

Alarms are not working for neither of us 😊😭 we do have an evening rutine, where he goes and 8/10 times pees, but thru out the day is a huge challenge for us 😭

Also it does not help to have a potty near by, he doesn't want to sit on it 🤦 but he will go sit on the toilet 💪

Maybe helping additional info- he was going already about a year back, quite frequently, he just started by himself when he saw others at the nursery. But over the summer he had a very, very hard time in his nursery because of 2 boys and he stopped completely, he was afraid of the potty/toilet, he started to use his dummy again, beside other things.. It was a very hard time, he needed about 6 months to be himself again 😞 so we basicly ended lower than the starting point we were at before that 😞😞

Now he started to show interest again, so we are trying to help him ease in ❤️ at nursery he goes when everyone else goes, and he pees at least half the times, but he never says he needs to pee. At evening when he sits he says look just before he pees, so I think he understands the feeling of "need to pee"?

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

28. März um 14:00

.

What worked best for you and what was the worse?

Anonymes Mitglied

26. März um 04:11

.

Need help my toddler was in pull-ups however I noticed that he got a pretty bad rash from it I assumed it was just too small of a size as he is only about 27 pounds but I put him in 2t-3T however just tonight he decided he wanted to try potty ing so I put him in a 3-4t pull up and noticed yet another red mark near his inner thigh what are some good recommendations that are skin sensitive and will not cause my toddler to get rashes and can be bought at Walmart fairly cheap

sassyperuana

I'd suggest trying for pull ups that are the exact same brand as the diapers you've been using bc the chemical makeup should be similar.

Otherwise skip the pullups and go straight to reusable cloth training pants. I recommend the big elephant brand on amazon

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nichole Slawter

24. März um 20:54

.

any tips on potty training?? i have a 15 months old boy and he's walking, running, doing all the motor milestones but still doesn't talk at all yet. he's getting to the point where he knows when he's peed/pooped in his diaper cause he'll start pulling at his diaper afterwards. i want to attempt to START trying to potty train him but idk how since he can't really talk or tell me when he has to go yet. any advice or should i wait until he can talk?

BeautifulFish3431

I have an 18 month old that doesn't communicate well verbally. Teach him the potty sign. It's working well for my child

1 Wo.

Antworten

Kimmy Lynn

28. März um 02:38

.

Help! We been potty training for over a month. In that time we have had 5 days with no accidents but then most days one to two accidents. Am I doing something wrong?

Anonymes Mitglied 361

Over here in solidarity.. we started almost 3 months ago and some days are great, some are a little wobbly and some are terrible 🤪 my girl is only 22 months though so i know its a slow process when starting young. She can tell me she needs to go and go successfully, she can go when prompted ag transitional points etc.

I dont think youll be doing anything wrong, I think it just takes time.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·28. März um 00:00

.

Which was the easiest for you you night or daytime training?

Anonymes Mitglied 909

You don't night train. It's a hormone.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

28. März um 02:38

.

Hi all

I have a 3 year old . 3 years 3 months to be exact . Doesn't want to go #2 on the toilet. They will sit there for an hour and nothing . As soon as the diaper is put back on they go within 10 minutes. I feel like an hour is long or is that normal ? Should I let them sit on the toilet for longer than that until they go ? No problem with #1 . We've tried stickers toys games books videos and even iPad on the toilet and nothing . I'm in no rush I know they will be ready when they are ready but I want to make sure I am doing the most I can to be encouraging

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member This is such a classic poo potty training stage and you are absolutely not alone. Wee and poo are very different skills for toddlers. Wee is quick and easy to release. Poo takes pushing, patience, and a body feeling that can feel strange or even scary when sitting on a toilet. What you're seeing is not stubbornness. It's comfort and control. The diaper feels familiar and safe for poo, the toilet does not yet.

An hour is actually too long to have them sit. After about five to ten minutes, if nothing is happening, their body has already decided it's not going to go. Sitting longer can make it feel like pressure and turn the toilet into a place they want to avoid. Short, relaxed sits work much better. Especially after meals when the body naturally wants to poo.

A really helpful trick is to stop treating this like a toilet problem and start treating it like a timing problem. Let them wear the diaper but bring them to the bathroom when you know they usually go. Let them poo in the diaper while sitting on the toilet. This bridges the gap between comfort and location. After a few days of that, you cut a small hole in the diaper so the poo drops into the toilet. Then eventually you remove the diaper. It sounds odd but it works because you're not removing the safety all at once.

Also make sure their feet are supported on a stool so they can push properly. That position makes a huge difference.

If you want a really gentle, step by step way to handle this exact stage without battles or pressure, THE POTTY TRAINING COMPANION by ALICE WHITEMORE is incredibly helpful and is on AMAZON. It walks through this diaper to toilet transition in a very realistic way.

You're doing great. This is a very normal hurdle and it usually clicks once they feel safe enough to let go.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Leslie Montano

23. März um 18:18

Hi everyone, just looking for some reassurance. I just started potty training my 20 month old, I attempted put him on the potty every 15 minutes and he was good with sitting every time but I don't think it helped him much with showing when he needs to poop or pee, so I opted on just putting training undies on him. He's had all accidents now, which I assume is normal because it's his first day. Has anyone tried this method ? When do you guys start seeing improvement ?

Anonymes Mitglied 804

3 months in with my now 22 month old and some days are great, some wobbly and some terrible. Embrace the accidents, be consistant and try stay as neutral as possible. I havent got this right all the time but I try. My girl can tell me she needs to go and go successfully but still have accidents in the same day. Its a huge skills and when starting young, its my understanding it takes longer than if we wait until 2.5 / 3.

One thing I did do was reduce my prompts to transitional periods such as wake, before bed or going out etc. After a few good days followed by a few bad days, ill prompt a little more often, maybe every 90 mins.

1 Wo.

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Anonymes Mitglied

27. März um 15:05

.

Advice for a 3.5 year old? He is developmentally delayed and cannot express verbally he needs to use the restroom sassyperuana

Sign language. My daughter as far as we know is neurotypical but we started potty training very minimally at 12 months before she could say potty. A fist in the air twisting to the left and right works. My daughter couldn't get the fist part down so she would raise a hand and shake it til she could say potty. I'm pretty sure the true ASL sign for potty is a fist with your thumb tucked between your index finger and middle finger and holding it in the air and twisting your wrist to the left and right

1 Wo.

Antworten

Sarah Myers-Allison

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·28. März um 04:00

·

My daughter turns 1 next week and my son is 3. Is there a way to start potty training them both?? Maybe she gets it done early and he finally gets it..

Anonymes Mitglied

28. März um 02:38

·

So my LO showed interest & actually peed in the potty when she was 15 months and right at 2 but then I gave up an now it's like she's scared to go in the potty.

Please give me some suggestions 🙄

Jazspen Nichole

I'm in the same boat with my daughter. She used to pee on the potty often.... But I was lenient since we also were moving her into her own bed in her room and I didn't want to cause too many issues/changes(I was also pregnant), now she acts terrified of big potties and doesn't want go on the small one either

1 Wo.

Antworten

Vicky Vamianakis

27. März um 23:44

.

Hey all just would like to mention that this book is a really easy read and straight to the point with going potty. My daughter loves reading it even as a night time story 🙄 i didnt do the rewards chart for her but ye I like the book.

Sarah Jojic

I like how simple this book is. My daughter also liked reading it before bed too lol. And I found the sticker chart helpful for the beginning stages!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

27. März um 23:44

.

Need tips to potty train my 2 year old boy.... Things that worked for you all. Thanks in advance!

Emma Watson

27. März um 10:26

.

I'm starting tomorrow with my 2 year old (she was 2 monday). She's showing all the signs to be ready for 🍌 this goes well!

I have steps to the toilet, a travel potty, puppy pads to try and save my carpet haha, up airy training knickers, a magnetic sticker chart, a toilet training bingo book with sound, a dolly potty, dolly nappy so dolly can go on the potty with her, seat covers for her car seat, fruit juice drinks to get her to drink lots (she's never had them before so I'm hoping it'll be a novelty and she will drink lots) lots of snacks....I hope I've covered it all!

Any advice is welcome! 🙏

Kayleigh Jones

Good luck! What's been good for my girl is the pee pee dance we do after she does one, and we drew a sticker chart together then she gets to pop a sticker on it after each time and when it's full we are going to the toy shop 😊 I believe these have helped us the most! The first 2 days we stayed home and she had no bottoms on so it was easier to go!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

24. März um 16:30

.

What has seemed to help your toddler go poop?

Harley Marie

Miralax, she sees a gastroenterologist

1 Wo.

Antworten

twinmumma2k24

21. März um 17:00

.

When to start potty training?

Hey guys i am a first time mum and my boy/girl twins are 18 months old-

My son is very aware of when his nappy needs changing to the point he wakes up at night when he feels that he is wet and needs a wee. My daughter isn't as aware yet but me and my Husband are letting them know when they've had a wee or a poop so they can try and differentiate between the feelings in their nappies.

My question is should I start trying to potty train them both now or should I hold off a little bit until they can communicate better that they are wet or they have pooped?

Sorry im just a little lost on what I should be doing-

Ive got my immediate family telling me I should have started already and then I have friends of kids with similar ages to wait.

Anonymes Mitglied 197

I started with my oldest a few months before he turned 3 when he started telling me he peed or pood in his diaper

2 Wo.

Antworten

Sara Mohammed

25. März um 13:24

•

How often should you take them to the toilet when you first start training? My toddler only wants to sit on the toilet but with 2 very active kids the idea of going upstairs every 15/20 mins is exhausting 😊

Kaci Whisler Jolson

I think it's about figuring out what works for your child. I'm a few days in and realized that every 15 min wasn't going to work for us. Going too often just seemed to make it negative for my son. I'm logging when he goes so I can hopefully see what's best for him,

1 Wo.

Antworten

Abbygayl Isaacs

20. März um 13:35

·

Has anyone successfully potty trained a 18 month old? Any tips and tricks? My daughter is doing so good but only seems to tell me as she's peeing not before 😂

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Take her on a schedule/routine! Like before/after naps or feeding, at certain times throughout the day, stuff like that!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Adrienne Suson

· Folgen

21. März um 20:39

.

Boys at 3+?

Hi! New mom here. But I've been a preschool teacher for years. Potty training has always been my least favorite thing and I know that as a preschool teacher I see a different side of it than the parents. So I'm going to be super vulnerable and just word vomit a little 😂

My husband is the type that if he reads something it has to be "the way" and if you do it to the T, the way will work no matter what. I am the type who bounces around and learns a little bit of everything before making my own conclusions about how I want to proceed.

With all this said, I've been very cautious of what parenting books and podcasts I recommend to him.

I have shown him the Brat Busters podcast, which I love. But that said, I do feel that there's always flexibility in these contexts when you know your child. My husband doesn't see it that way. It's black and white. Only.

I then showed him the Oh Crap! potty training book. I said that I like the method but I haven't learned enough about yet to make a decision. He then went and read the entire book....

Apparently in the book it says that if you haven't started potty training between 20 months and 32 months, you're late. This stuck with my husband and he feels that we need to start potty training immediately.

Our son is 33 months (3 at the end of June) and I was planning to start this summer. He has shown some signs of interest. But still isn't acknowledging when he's going, etc.

Regardless we're just not on the same page and it's crazy frustrating.

So I guess my question is... what age did you potty train your active almost 3 year old and how long did it take? What should I expect? How do I reward? What method is best?

Thanks for reading this far!!!!

Saadia Hassam

Just wanted to add, if you're going to give it a go, you need to be mentally fully on board too. Because my husband decided it... Mehr anzeigen

2 Wo.

Antworten
Bearbeitet

Anonymes Mitglied

26. März um 04:06

Hi! My son is 28 months old. We started potty training 3/15 after we went out and his diaper was dry so I sat him on the potty at our destination and he went and then consistently went on the potty all day. (So yes this was unplanned, as I had planned to potty train him closer to 2.5 but he was ready!) Anyways fast forward to now he is doing amazing. No accidents, in underwear, have done outings, and hasn't been peeing in his diaper during naps. Now my only question is- I take him to the potty when he gets up in the morning/before nap/after nap/before bed and then every hour in between, he isn't "self initiating" yet because I am on top of that part for him. So do I keep doing this for a couple of weeks or do I start prompting less/taking him less and see if he takes me/let him have accidents if needed to help him learn the feeling? I don't want to mess up his progress but I don't want to cause any setbacks later down the line. I read in the oh crap book that it can take up to 6 weeks for self initiating but wanted to see if what we are doing is right. Thank you all in advance!!

KindOstrich5212

Maybe start increasing time between potty breaks. You aren't giving him much time to need to go. My 30 month old daughter that refuses to be told when it's time to go potty, naturally goes about 2-3 hours between wees.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

27. März um 10:26

My daughter has been trained for wee during the day for 4 weeks now. But she's still doing poo in her pants.

How do I help her with this transition. She tells me as soon as she has done the poo in her undies.

Jessica Frances

Potty training consultant here. Have her go naked at home from the waist down. Most kiddos won't poo on the floor more than once.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

25. März um 06:40

I feel like when under 4 going potty is a chore.

Jessie Critch

I no u feel like u dont get anywhere accident after accident I work in a day nursery school but my key child finally got it just be4 her 3rd birthday xxx u have to be strict and persistent every ten mins put them on potty say good girl or boy well done and give them a sticker xd

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

26. März um 21:57

.

Since potty training my little girl has been getting non stop nappy rash, she never ever had it whilst in nappies. We're using toilet tissue to wipe and it's clean when we do so I don't know why she's getting so irritated. Should I go back to using wet wipes?

Anonymes Mitglied 231

Keep using wet wipes, especially if they were hypoallergenic. White toilet paper has chlorine and other chemicals in it, so she can definitely be sensitive to it. So either wet wipes or change toilet papers to a nontoxic type.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Carley Sloan

27. März um 03:01

.

My son is 21 months old. He will be 2 in June. We got him his own potty but he really just doesn't seem interested or that he really knows what it is used for.

He always go with me and dad to use the restroom and we talk to him and show him. He loves flushing the toilet for us so he's not scared at all. I just don't think he's ready. Is this normal at his age?

& honestly I don't have any motivation on trying to be consistent with him or stress about it yet.

What is a good age to become very consistent with him? Or will he tell us or show us on his own? What has worked for you and your little ones?

Thank you in advance!! ❤️❤️

Ruth Jean

My daughter just turned 12 months and I got her a potty, It's been 4 weeks now and it's going great, she can't yet communicate to tell me when she needs to go but she's getting use to the concept and vocabulary like peepee, poopoo , potty. And one of the things that works for me is to put her on the toilet as soon as she wakes up, cause most times we wake up with a full bladder, now whenever I go to the toilet I take her with me, even if she stares at me the whole time, she's just learning the concept.

I did that with my first daughter and she was fully potty trained by 2

1 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·26. März um 21:26

.

How do we handle tantrums regarding potty training?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Danielle Fouquet Tantrums around potty training are sooo common because this is usually the first time a toddler feels real control over something and realizes they can say no. It's not really about the potty most of the time, it's about independence, frustration, and not liking to be told what to do. The biggest thing that helps is taking the pressure way down. The more we push, remind, ask, or rush them to sit on the potty, the more they dig their heels in. Try shifting from telling to offering. Instead of it's time to go potty, say the potty is right here if your body needs it. That tiny language change gives them control back.

If a tantrum starts, don't argue about the potty. Stay calm, acknowledge feelings, and move on. You can say I see you're upset, we can try again later. Then drop it. Toddlers sense when we really want them to do something and that pressure can actually make accidents and refusal worse. Keep potty moments light, even playful. Let them sit clothed sometimes, read a book there, or bring a toy, so it's not always serious.

Watch for their cues instead of sticking to strict timing. If they start hiding, pausing play, or grabbing themselves, gently guide without urgency. And if it's been a rough couple days, it's completely fine to take a short break and come back in a week. That's not failing, it often resets the power struggle.

For really practical ways to handle toddler resistance, routines, and potty training without turning it into a battle, THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD BY ALICE WHITEMORE has some super helpful toddler transition tips written in a real, mom friend tone. You can find it on AMAZON and it's great to skim when you're in the middle of these tricky stages.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

24. März um 23:22

What is your success story of the day?

ThrillingPeapod1184

Only one wee accident all day and 2 poos on the potty!

1 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·27. März um 06:40

All three of my kids have had such a big difference in their potty training adventures. My oldest potty trained the best by far, and kids have a huge age gap. Sometimes i cant help but wonder if i was a better mom when i was younger, or if my younger two are just harder since they're so close in age.

Anonymes Mitglied

25. März um 18:58

.

We've started potty training, and my girl is staying dry, but won't go pee in the potty yet. Is this a normal part of the process? 😊 😊

Anonymes Mitglied 341

no its holding it

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

25. März um 13:24

.

My 2.5 year old can go to the potty/ toilet no worries if reminded both poo and wee. But for a few weeks now she will always do a little wee trickle before she even realises she needs the toilet, so regardless we need to change underwear. - she will then finish her wee on the toilet, which she will go to after she's realised she's done some wee or she will come tell me.

When it comes to poo, she would rather go squat somewhere random then go to the toilet (if I take her to the toilet she will do a poo there but only if i take her) if not she will hide somewhere instead!

Any tips?! I'm ready to do nappies again so I'm not changing clothes on her! I must add she won't wear a nappy/pull up either so she takes that off to poo as well so no matter what, poo isn't contained 😊

I have a 5 month old too so a bit drained 😊

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member Hi mama 🧡 I can feel how draining this is, especially with a 5 month old on top, like you're juggling a lot and still trying to stay consistent with your toddler, that's not easy at all.

What you're describing is actually super common at this stage, even though it feels like a setback. That little trickle before she gets to the potty is usually a sign that her body is still learning to recognise the urge early enough. It's not that she's regressing, it's more like her awareness hasn't fully caught up with her body yet.

And the hiding to poo? That is honestly one of the most normal toddler behaviours ever. A lot of kids prefer privacy when pooping because it feels vulnerable or just more comfortable to them. The fact that she will go on the toilet if you take her is actually a really good sign, it means she knows what to do, she just doesn't initiate it yet.

So what usually helps here is taking the pressure down a bit and working with her rather than against her.

For the wee situation, instead of waiting for her to tell you or catch it late, try building in gentle timed potty sits. Not strict, not forced, just regular little reminders like every 1.5 to 2 hours, especially during high risk times like after waking up or before meals. This helps "catch" the wee before it starts, which slowly trains her body to recognise the feeling earlier.

You can also try keeping her in easy clothes or even letting her be a bit more free at home so she can feel the urge earlier. Some toddlers actually respond better when they can feel a bit of urgency without underwear absorbing it straight away.

For the poo hiding, this is where a bit of creativity helps. You can watch her pattern closely, because most kids have a "poo face" or go quiet, move to a corner, squat slightly, or act different. When you notice those early signs, gently say something like "let's go sit on the potty for your poo" and guide her there before she disappears to hide. Over time, this helps her associate that feeling with the potty instead of hiding.

Also, try making the potty feel like a safe, normal place. Some kids like having a book, or even sitting there with you nearby. It removes that pressure feeling and makes it more inviting.

I know you mentioned thinking about going back to nappies, and honestly, that's not a failure at all. Sometimes a short reset actually helps break the cycle of constant accidents and stress. But since she won't wear them anyway, it might just be about adjusting expectations a bit and supporting her through this messy middle phase.

You're not doing anything wrong at all, this is just one of those phases that looks messy before it clicks.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD BY ALICE WHITEMORE and what really stood out to me was how it talks about respecting a child's readiness cues instead of forcing control. Even though it's more feeding focused, the mindset around trusting the child while gently guiding them really helped me with these toddler transitions too. I found it on AMAZON and it honestly gave me a calmer approach to moments like this where things feel out of control.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Noctor Eirin

• Folgen

18. März um 17:05

.

Outside trips advise

Hi, my daughter is 22 months and we have just potty trained her, she has now done a week pretty much no accidents and is telling me when she needs the potty rather than relying on me to put her on it to try etc.... So all going well, however leaving the house I have this constant anxiety of her needing potty but having no where to put the travel potty privately or a toilet nearby in time for her to hold... As I have no idea if she can hold it for long as at home she says she needs it and the potty is there ready or only 30 secs away etc....and as much as she is speaking she is still only 22 months so if I say hold it, she probably doesn't know what I mean, and the panic will panic her. How did you deal with going places where there may not be a toilet close by. Lucky while we been out she not needed it (but again I'm thinking is she holding it because she knows we are out) as at home I feel she would go more during the day but since we have we out she hasn't asked it needed it when offered. Thank you

ArticulateRaspberry949

Sorry I don't have an answer but just looking some advice for potty training a 22 month old?? This is amazing you have done this at this age. I've been thinking my daughter is ready to start! Thanks

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

19. Januar

.

She started at 3!

Madison Linville-Pierce

She started at 20 months.

10 Wo.

Antworten

Naomi Jackson

25. März um 23:52

.

Anyone have experience with little ones not wanting to poo at nursery? He wees on the potty fine there but has been having poo accidents or not doing it for days and then only at home tonight it's ended up where he's done it in his bedtime nappy and whilst he's been asleep we've only been toilet training a month and this is the only issue we've had

ArticulateRaspberry949

25. März um 13:24

.

Success stories for 22 months?? 🚽

I have a daughter - almost 22 months old

She is very advanced in her speech and has really good understanding (can basically have full conversations)

We have been modelling and playing with the potty for months now.

Asked to go to the potty yesterday and peed! First time. Also poo'd the day before in the potty but was more of a fluke.

What would you do next? I think I will continue to offer the potty before bath, bed etc and then try proper training (3 day method) in a few weeks

Is there any point? Will she be fully potty trained at this age? Any success stories??

Thanks

Anonymes Mitglied 659

We started at 18. She's now 25months and will only poo in the small potty (portable) or big potty (regular toilet). Still have accidents with pee, but I now use regular panties instead of training, except in the mornings at daycare where she's required to be on diapers.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

24. März um 19:09

Potty training when out and about

Hi mums. this might be a silly question, but what do you do when you're out at the park or anywhere out and your little one needs a wee? And there are no tpilets nearby. I don't drive, so I don't have the option of using a car for a portable potty.

Thank you

Sabina Kaur

I have a carry potty. My son loves it. Leakproof and son loves using it over the toilet. Must be comfy

1 Wo.

Antworten

Tina Liu

25. März um 15:16

Hi everyone 🤍 looking for some advice or to see if anyone has experienced something similar!

My son is almost 4 and fully potty trained at home with no issues. However, since the start of the school year, he has been holding his pee all day at school.

A bit more context:

- He's comfortable using the potty at home
- At school, the washroom stalls are inside the classroom and he has full access whenever he wants
- His teachers are very supportive, remind him regularly
- He drinks water and eats normally throughout the day
- He does NOT have accidents, just holds it until he gets home

• We previously went in once a day to help him go, and he would pee with us there, but now that we've stopped going in, he's back to holding it again

I'm not sure if this is a control thing, comfort issue, or something else. Has anyone gone through this? How did you help your child feel comfortable enough to go at school?

Any advice or experiences would be really appreciated 🧡

Aghwaritefe Glory

Tina Liu Hey mama 🧡 this is actually something a lot of parents go through, even though it can feel a bit worrying when you see your child holding it all day like that.

What you're describing is often called "school refusal to toilet," and it's usually not a physical problem, more of an emotional or control-based thing. At almost 4, kids are very aware of their surroundings, and school is a whole different environment compared to home. Even if the toilets are right there and accessible, it can still feel unfamiliar or less "safe" to him in his little mind.

The fact that he pees perfectly fine at home is a really good sign. It shows he can go, he just chooses not to at school. And the fact that he used to go when you were there but now holds it again once you stopped going in actually points to comfort and reassurance being a big factor for him.

Some kids this age hold their pee because they're busy playing, some don't like using shared toilets, some feel a bit anxious about the environment, and some just don't want to interrupt what they're doing. It's very common for them to "save it" for home where they feel most relaxed.

What usually helps is gently building confidence without pressure. Instead of focusing on "you need to go at school," try shifting the focus to helping him feel comfortable about the idea of going there. You can do this by talking about it in a relaxed way at home, like "your school toilet is just like our toilet, your body knows what to do when it's ready."

You could also work with his teacher to encourage a low-pressure routine, like everyone having a quick toilet break at certain times, so he's not singled out. Sometimes when it's part of a group routine, kids feel more comfortable joining in.

Another thing that can help is rewarding the effort rather than the result. So even if he just sits on the toilet at school, that's something to celebrate, even if he doesn't go. That builds positive association over time.

You might also want to gradually reduce any pressure around it. The more it feels like "he has to go," the more some kids hold it to stay in control. Keeping it light and encouraging helps a lot.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD BY ALICE WHITEMORE and what really stuck with me was how much it emphasises following the child's comfort and readiness instead of forcing outcomes. Even though it's focused on feeding, that same mindset really helped me when dealing with toddler independence moments like this. I found it on AMAZON and it honestly helped me take a step back and trust the process a bit more.

You're actually doing really well here mama 🧡 this is one of those phases that can take a little time, but with gentle consistency and reassurance, most kids naturally start going at school once they feel more secure.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Ladi Bliitz

• Folgen

21. März um 19:55

.

So my toddler was doing kickass with her potty training. Now she just won't even try to go on the potty.
Super regression.
Any tips or advice ?

SAHM❤️

Same... only I think she's in a phase with jealousy with her 5 month old brother. Been going on for 2 weeks now. Not even pushing potty training at this point.

2 Wo.

Antworten

SAHM ❤️

25. März um 15:15

My daughter will be 3 in June. I did a slow start to potty training in December. Around end of January and beginning of February she was making progress with running to the potty when need me with a few accidents. Now, I think she regressed. I can have her in underwear and she just pees in it no matter what. She won't even ask to go and use the potty anymore. Basically seems uninterested. If I mention it turns into a fight. She's very strong willed, basically good luck getting her to do anything. I and idk if this is normal but from the moment she wakes up to the time she goes to bed she will just hold her hands in her private area and will just rock in place. Very hard to distract her to not do this. She did it around in December and then it stopped and now back at it again and it seems like when this started back up is when she stopped wanting to potty train. Nothing shows of UTI and nothing looks to be an infection. So just wondering if this is normal? And part of potty training? New to this. In October she became a big sister so not sure if she is having a delayed regression and dealing comfort holding her lady region 🧘

Aghwaritefe Glory

SAHM ❤️ Hey mama 🧡 I know this is stressful, especially when she was making progress and now it feels like everything reversed. What you're seeing is actually something a lot of strong willed toddlers go through, and you're not doing anything wrong.

That hand holding and rocking you're describing is more common than people realise at this age. For some toddlers, it's a self soothing habit. They're not doing it with any "intent" in an adult way, it's just something that helps them regulate their body or feel comfort, especially when they're overwhelmed, tired, bored, or even just figuring out their body.

Now, linking it to potty training, what likely happened is this. When she started having success, she felt in control and motivated. Then something shifted, maybe pressure, maybe just a phase, maybe the big life change of becoming a big sister, and now she's kind of saying "nope, I'm not ready or I don't want this right now." That regression can absolutely happen.

When a toddler starts resisting and holding, especially a very strong willed one, pushing harder usually backfires. It can turn into a power struggle, and suddenly potty becomes the thing she doesn't want to do.

So the goal right now isn't to force potty training, it's to gently reset the pressure.

Let her take a break from underwear if needed and go back to nappies or pull ups for a bit. This removes that constant stress and accident cycle.

Keep the potty available, but don't push it. Just casually mention it like "potty is here if you need it" and leave it at that. No battles, no repeated asking.

About the hand behaviour, try not to shame or constantly pull her hands away. Instead, gently redirect her with activities, movement, or sensory play. Sometimes kids do this more when they're understimulated or trying to self soothe.

If it's very frequent or intense, or if you're concerned, it's okay to mention it to your pediatrician just to rule anything out, but in many cases it's a normal phase that comes and goes.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and what really helped me was understanding toddler regressions and how they often tie into big emotional changes like becoming a sibling. It helped me realise that stepping back a bit actually helps them move forward again later. I found it on AMAZON and it gave me a calmer way to handle these moments without turning it into a fight.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Lyn Garcia

24. März um 18:23

Can anyone send me a list of helpful items or useful hacks/routines they use during the training process. My LO is 23 months and I started slowly transitioning her to potty train at home and at daycare with upairy training underwear at 21 & 1/2 months and she is still having accidents; peeing in her panties even though we go to sit on the potty on average 25 - 45 min. Intervals. We even will go when she wants to go try herself. Any advice would be helpful.

Aghwaritefe Glory

Lyn Garcia Hey mama, I can hear how much effort you're putting in, and honestly you're doing a lot already 🥰💛 the fact that you're going every 25 to 45 minutes and still getting accidents usually just means she's not fully ready yet, not that you're doing anything wrong.

At 23 months, some toddlers just haven't built that full body awareness yet, so even with frequent potty sits, they may still pee in their panties before they can connect the signal in time. Training underwear also feels like a diaper to some kids, so they relax and go without noticing as much.

A helpful shift that many parents find works better is spacing out potty trips a bit more, like every 1 to 1.5 hours, so it doesn't feel like constant sitting and pressure. Too many forced sits can actually make some kids resist or tune out the feeling of needing to go.

Another thing is watching her natural patterns. A lot of toddlers pee at certain times like after waking up, after meals, before naps, or before bath time. Catching those moments can help build more success without constant sitting.

Try to keep things very relaxed and positive. When she sits, even if nothing happens, just keep it calm and don't turn it into a "you must go" moment. Praise when she does go, but stay neutral when she doesn't. Pressure can make some toddlers hold it in or ignore their body signals.

Also consider switching to either full diapers for a short reset or going fully bottomless at home for a few days if you can. Bottomless time helps them feel when they're peeing, which builds that awareness faster than training pants sometimes.

And one more thing, accidents are still completely normal at this stage. Daytime control takes time to master, and most kids don't fully get it until closer to 2.5 to 3 years anyway.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and while it's more about sleep, what really stuck with me was how it emphasizes reading your child's readiness instead of forcing a timeline. That mindset helped me stop stressing milestones and just support my child at their pace. I found it on AMAZON and it really helped me feel more confident in moments like this.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

25. März um 16:24

Has anyone ever tried using timers and child cues? Which one worked better for you?

MotiveWolf8597

I tried timers...it did not work for my toddler.

1 Wo.

Antworten

ThrillingPeapod1184

25. März um 01:29

Just need to share our success! After a month of training, my 18 month old only had 1 accident today! And it was this morning at nursery at the start of her 10 hour nursery day and then no accidents at home before bed! We've had such a struggle with nursery so this really feels like a win! 🎉👏

Jennifer Cooke

Can I ask is he talking yet, I want to start with my LO but she isn't speaking yet so not sure how she's going to communicate

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

22. März um 06:28

.

What's your favorite training diapers?

Nikita Waldner

Honestly, diapers or pull ups aren't good for potty training, thick underwear are the trick, it doesn't "soak in and almost dry" u want them to feel the discomfort of being wet so they don't wanna pee in whatever they're wearing!

2 Wo.

Antworten

PinkBee6399

24. März um 22:41

.

Does anyone have any potty training app recommendations?

Planning on starting potty training the first week of April. Would need to be an app that both myself and his dad could have accounts on but still be linked to the same child if that makes sense?

Me and his dad aren't together and he does spend about a week at his dad's house each month so would be great for both of us!

Anonymes Mitglied 709

Curious what is the app for?

A time? Or tips?

1 Wo.

Antworten

GiftedSpinach8081

25. März um 05:55

My son was potty trained around 3 , at home , using the toilet seat . But he refuses to wipe, and now we have preschool this year , really need some tips

Aghwaritefe Glory

GiftedSpinach8081 Hey mama, this is actually sooo common at this age 🙄💛 a lot of kids learn to use the toilet first, but wiping is a whole separate skill, and it takes time for them to get the coordination and confidence.

At around 3, most kids can't wipe properly yet, especially after a poo, so don't panic like he's behind, he's really not. It's more about teaching the process slowly and helping him feel comfortable trying.

A good place to start is breaking it into small, simple steps. You can guide him through it at first, like handing him the tissue, showing him how to reach, and letting him try, then you "check and finish." That way he's learning without the pressure of doing it perfectly.

You can also make it a bit more fun and less awkward. Some parents use little sayings like "wipe till it's clean" or even show using a doll or pretend play, because kids at this age learn a lot through play.

Another big help is using wet wipes instead of dry tissue (just make sure they're flushable or you bin them). They're much easier for little hands and clean better, which builds confidence faster.

Also teach him to wipe from front to back, and keep reminding gently without making it a big deal if he forgets.

Since preschool is coming, you can explain it simply like "at school, you'll try your best, and teachers can help if needed." Most preschools expect kids to still need some help with wiping, so you're not alone in this at all.

Consistency is key, just let him practice every time without pressure. It will click with repetition.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and what really helped me was understanding that self care skills like this develop in stages, not all at once. It helped me stop expecting perfection too early and just focus on progress. I found it on AMAZON and it really made me feel less stressed about milestones like this.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

20. März um 01:59

.

How long did it take you to potty train your toddler?

Anonymes Mitglied 938

3 days she got the idea. A month to get her to poop on the potty. 6 months fully potty trained for #2 (no more accidents), #1 regressed and still working on it

2 Wo.

Antworten

Heidi White

22. März um 06:20

.

So proud of me wee girl she's been in same undies all day (nappy when we went to in laws) and it's been all dry I only had to change her 1ce from a poo so from 8am till now (3.40pm) she's been dry

Emily Saunders

That is good but is she dehydrated?

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

24. März um 18:23

.

I have a toddler boy, 3 in May. Getting stressed as we tried to start potty training in earnest in January and have had no successful wees in potty. He tends to hold it in during a potty sit and then do a wee in nappy immediately once it is on. Has also started 'playing' down there when pants/nappy off.

Any advice on this?

.

Anonymes Mitglied

24. März um 15:40

.

My daughter has just turned 3 , we started potty training last August she did great for a month , then started leaking lots in her knickers , no UTI, we persevered for 6 months but she always had wet knickers not a full wee just very damp , we took a break for 2 months as I was was getting stressed with the situation , restarted a month ago and she did so well a month down the line and the leaking has started again , has anyone else experienced this ? I don't know how to over come it or why it's happening , any comments would be greatly received xxxxxxxx

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member Hey mama, I can hear how stressful this has been for you 😞 and honestly you've already shown so much patience going through this twice, that's not easy at all.

What you're describing with the damp knickers and small leaks is actually something a lot of parents run into. It doesn't always mean something is medically wrong, especially since a UTI has already been ruled out. In many cases, it's more about how the bladder and body are coordinating at this stage.

At around 3 years old, some kids still haven't fully mastered holding and releasing their bladder consistently. Those little leaks can happen when they're distracted, playing, or even just not noticing the signals early enough. It's not intentional and it's definitely not her being lazy or defiant.

Sometimes it also happens if a child is holding their wee for too long, then their bladder gets a bit overfull and leaks before they make it to the potty. Other times, they're just so focused on what they're doing that they miss the early signals until it's too late.

What can help is gently encouraging regular potty breaks throughout the day, like every 1 to 2 hours, even if she says she doesn't need to go. This helps keep the bladder from getting too full and reduces those little leaks.

Also, make sure she's relaxed when sitting on the potty. Some kids need a bit of reassurance or even a routine, like potty after meals or before leaving the house.

Try not to stress or show frustration, I know that's easier said than done, but pressure can sometimes make things worse. Keep things calm, neutral, and encouraging when she does go successfully.

If the leaking continues for a long time, or if it starts to look like she's not fully emptying her bladder, it's worth going back to the doctor just to double check, but most of the time this is just part of the learning process.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and what really helped me was understanding that these regressions and uneven progress phases are completely normal in early childhood development. It helped me stop seeing it as a problem I caused and instead as a skill she's still mastering. I found it on AMAZON and it really gave me peace of mind during phases like this.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

24. März um 15:21

Looking for advice!

My daughter is 2 in a half. She was doing really well on the potty. But then she had the stomach bug and diarrhea for over a week. It's been 2 months since she was sick and she's nervous to use the bathroom. How can I encourage her to use the bathroom again?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member Hey mama, this actually happens more often than people think, and you're not alone in this at all 😞 what your daughter is showing is likely a fear response after that stomach bug experience. In her little mind, the bathroom is now connected with feeling sick, uncomfortable, or even out of control, so she's avoiding it to feel safe again.

The important thing here is to rebuild confidence slowly without pressure. The biggest tip is to remove all pressure around using the potty. Avoid forcing, bribing, or making it a big deal when she does or doesn't go. The more relaxed the environment, the faster she'll feel safe again.

You can start by just having her sit on the potty with clothes on first, just to rebuild comfort. Then maybe sit without pressure, even if she doesn't go. You can read a book, sing, or keep it light and fun so she reconnects with the potty in a positive way.

Also, let her watch you or another trusted adult use the bathroom if that's something you're comfortable with, because at this age, imitation is powerful and helps normalize it again.

Another thing that really helps is reintroducing a gentle routine. Like sitting on the potty after waking up, before bath time, or after meals, but again, without any pressure for her to actually go.

If she has an accident, stay calm and neutral. No stress, no disappointment. Just clean up and move on. That emotional safety is what helps her regain confidence.

Sometimes giving it a bit of time while still offering gentle encouragement works better than pushing too hard, especially after something like a stomach bug.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and what really stood out to me was how it explained that regressions like this are actually very normal after illness or stress. It helped me stop panicking and just support my child through the fear instead of rushing the process. I found it on AMAZON and it gave me a much calmer approach to situations like this.

1 Wo.

Antworten

RedChestnut488

24. März um 14:08

.

Dry nights...

We started potty training my 28m daughter at end of January. She's been amazing. She self prompts and she's been accident free. We've still been putting pull ups on her of a night, but she's been dry every night. At what point would you bite the bullet and remove the pull up? Thanks x

Emma Ratcliffe

My daughter started asking to not wear one and we just went along with it. You might find when she clocks on to the fact that smaller babies wear nappies that she sees it as a big girl coming of age thing to not have one on at night. You could always ask her and see what she says but I found it easier with my 3 year old as she could properly iterate her ideas etc

1 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

23. März um 18:15

.

Not really a potty issue, more like a toilet accident, and I guess it's probably my fault too.

Past weekend I went shopping with my toddler. She needed to pee, not a big deal, plenty of toilets available in the shopping mall, although they all have seats for adults.

So I went with her inside a stall, and she's in a hurry because she really needs to go. She hops on the toilet and puts her hands on the back of the seat to get some sup... Mehr anzeigen

Angela Reynolds

Mine's a boy so I'm constantly having to remind him to point the hose in 🤪

1 Wo.

Antworten

Deborah Derya Yildirim

23. März um 06:28

I use a magnetic potty sticker chart for my my 28 month old daughter's potty training. It takes 6 smiley faces to earn a star. When she earns a star, I let her wear the "potty star" crown that came with the set. Those of you who also use a sticker chart and give a reward... do you just start the idea over? For example, she can get a smiley for flushing and washing hands with an adults help. Since we're in the beginning of training, I'm making this purposely easy for now. But my intentions are obviously so she can tell me she has to use the potty. Which she never gets a smiley face for that. I've modeled for her time and time again. How do I encourage her to tell me? She always tells me after she's gone potty. I show her on the chart and say "oh no we didn't tell mommy we had to go potty". I don't make a super big deal about it but I want her to see that she didn't earn a smiley for that so she can grasp the concept eventually. Should I be approaching this differently? She's my firstborn so I don't know much about potty training. Please any and all advice is appreciated. Thank you 😊

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

24. März um 02:04

I wanna make a sticker chart, can i see yours?

Anonymes Mitglied

22. März um 15:05

My son is 14 months and he can't walk yet but he can crawl and he's interested in the toilet should I be ready to potty train

Megan Gray

No. You want them to be able to walk, pull their pants, and communicate they need to go

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

23. März um 20:29

So my LO has stayed dry all day at school but also not going potty 😞 I'm excited shes staying dry but is she nervous why isn't she going at all?

Aghwaritefe Glory

Anonymous member Aww mama I get why you're feeling both proud and worried at the same time 😞 staying dry all day is actually a BIG win, but yeah, not going at all can feel confusing.

What's most likely happening is she's holding it because of the new environment. A lot of little ones feel unsure using the potty at school, different bathroom, different people, noise, routine, all of that can make them freeze up a bit. So instead of going, they just hold it until they're back somewhere they feel totally safe.

This is super common during potty training, especially in new settings like school. It doesn't usually mean something is wrong, it's more about confidence and comfort.

You can help her by gently talking about it at home, like asking if the school potty feels scary or different. Sometimes even small things like flushing sounds or unfamiliar toilets can bother them. You can also practice using different bathrooms when you're out, so she gets used to going in places that aren't just home.

Let her teachers know too so they can remind her regularly and keep things low pressure. Sometimes kids just need a bit more time and reassurance before they feel okay going there.

Also keep an eye on her when she gets home, a lot of kids will rush to the potty or have a big pee once they're back in their safe space. That's usually a sign she was just holding it all day.

If she continues not going at all for long periods or seems uncomfortable, then it's worth looking into more, but in most cases this settles as they get more used to the environment.

I remember reading THE LATCH TO SPOON SYSTEM METHOD By ALICE WHITEMORE and what helped me was understanding how kids react to new environments and transitions. It made me realize a lot of these behaviors are about emotional adjustment, not defiance or problems. I found it on AMAZON and it really helped me stay calm during phases like this.

1 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

23. März um 16:30

.

Did you buy a sticker chart pre made or did you make ones yourself? If you made ones yourself , show pics!

Parentingkiddos

23. März um 20:41

.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

23. März um 20:40

.

Who has used the communication elimination method? What age was your LO when you started and how old were they when they were potty trained?

Cami Woodstock

23. März um 16:41

.

Has anyone used a sticker reward chart for potty training? Any links or recommendations pls?

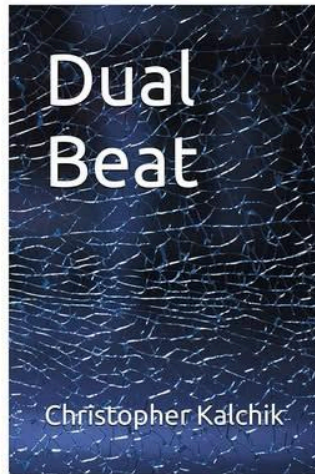

Christopher Winn Kalchik

• Folgen

23. März um 13:38

.

I invite you to explore my book, Dual Beat. In Dual Beat, a series of gruesome murders unfolds in New York City and Los Angeles. NYPD Detectives Chris Walker and Janet Evans investigate the homicide of a young journalist, while LAPD Officers Alejandro Torres and Travis King discover a body behind a dilapidated motel with striking similarities. Rookie officers Dan and Carlos are thrust into the fray, confronting the harsh realities of their profession, as crime scene technicians and forensic experts uncover a disturbing pattern. As media scrutiny intensifies and hidden truths emerge, both departments converge on a collision course with a cunning predator who stalks undetected—one mile marker at a time.

amazon.com

Dual Beat (The Dual Beat series)

Anonymes Mitglied

22. März um 15:05

Hi, I think I'd like to get a carry potty for my little boy because I think he'd appreciate the penguin design, but they're so expensive. What do people think about getting one secondhand from Vinted? Is it sanitary?

Danyal-Cerys Green

Of course it is, just clean it when you get it. It's cleaner than using a public toilet because you can clean this one yourself

2 Wo.

Antworten

Tyler Thompson

23. März um 01:05

.

Does anyone have any apps they'd recommend for potty training?

Anonymes Mitglied 655

The pull-ups potty app is a training app where after the child succeeds after milestones of staying dry and having successful trips after each milestone you get a new Disney character to play instruments with there's Daisy Mickey Minnie Donald Goofy and Chip and Dale each of them have an instrument with each milestone successfully completed and then after the child becomes fully potty trained you get to play a graduation song together with the entire band it's a cute very disneyish way to have your child successful with potty training good luck and I hope this app helps it can be downloaded on phones only I would recommend it and try it

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

23. März um 06:28

.

How do parents navigate medical procedures when training? My son is in undies all day and only a night nappy overnight and he is struggling with that. Like one day no accidents then next its like 6 or 7 accidents. For a procedure where he has to be anaesthetised and its an hour drive to the hospital from home and back would you just use a nappy? I don't want to confuse him but also don't want to put him through unnecessary stress of oh no i wet myself which he gets really upset about.

IndigoWallaby762

Kids r smart, if it was my child including my medical complex child I would put them in a pullup and say let's use to the toilet when we can but not stress about an accident

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

18. März um 22:04

.

How can I teach my 2.5 year old to poop in the toilet? Currently she only pees in the toilet and she poops in her diaper during nap/quiet time. Tips please!

Rose O'Brien

I switched my just 2 year old from the little potty to a big toilet set up, you know with the steps thing that goes ontop of the big potty and she's obsessed now with no accidents

2 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

20. März um 18:00

.

Parents Choice pullups are so horrible i will never buy them again

Timmy Fraser

We only use huggies pull-ups

Love the fact that they seem stretchier and they are the only ones with refastenable tabs

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

17. März um 20:43

.

mind showing what Kind of pull ups you guys use?

BeautifulFish3431

I've tried parents choice, rascals, dyper, and pampers. Pampers easy ups are the best ones I've found. I'm a Huggies mom all the way but Huggies pull ups rub my baby raw from the Velcro

2 Wo.

Antworten

Edel Ryan

19. März um 01:33

.

My 22 month old pees on the floor every time, not the potty, anyone have any tips

BeautifulFish3431

What kind of potty are you using? A seat for the regular toilet or a toddler potty?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Megan Gray

20. März um 03:15

.

Anyone seen/bought one of these?

Thoughts? I need to buy a potty asap so we can start training

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I haven't seen this one specifically, but I think anything is better than nothing!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

22. März um 02:04

•

My 3 (4 in May) year old has been pee potty trained since beginning of October. It was so easy, it took him 4 days to do it and he also pooped on the potty a few times that weekend. After that, the pooping on the potty completely stopped. I tried everything I could think of and every piece of advice I received.

Sticker charts

Special prizes

New underwear

Gentle reminders

Scheduled toileting

Books about pooping

Videos about pooping

Talking about feelings regarding pooping

Pooping in his diaper in the bathroom and moving to the toilet after a few days

Letting him walk around pants less

Having him clean himself up

Having himself clean his underwear when he poops himself

We've been at this for a solid 4 months. I'm at a complete loss. Nothing is working and it's gotten to the point that he screams to the point of hyperventilating when we try to do scheduled potty time and he's constantly pooping his pants so his butt is sore. He's also now constipated because he holds it in so if we put a pull up on him knowing he has to poop but won't on the potty, he just pees in his pull up even with reminders.

Any recommendations are much appreciated!!!!

Saadia Hassam

Can u start by sitting on loo with pull up on? Then slowly rip one side after a bit then the other?

Have u tried scoop poop into loo and flush? Does he understand that the poop in pants is giving him a sore bum?

Maybe gp for some laxatives for the constipation too

My son used to cry everytime he pooped on the loo because it was so overwhelming and different

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

21. März um 23:45

.

If my LO is staying dry majority of the day but still having accidents and not peeing in the potty; will she still train pretty easy?

Natalie Sadaeva

How old is she?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

21. März um 19:55

.

My daycare has told me it's time to potty train her and my daughter is clearly ready. She tells us when she has to go pee... It's starting to pull her diaper down to go... Love's being on the potty. But I haven't seen any signs of her ready for poop other than she tells us once she is done.

What is the best way of doing this On a weekend? My daycare suggested putting her on the potty every hour, and she'll get it. I just don't know how to start any tips, please. She is exactly 25 months

Levii Amber Turner

.

I just bought a loads of knickers and put the potty out and told her every time she use the potty or toilet she gets a sticker. We haven't had nappys since...there will be accidents but it won't last long xx

2 Wo.

Antworten

Sarah Myslinski

21. März um 19:55

.

Ok... So my son is about 28 lbs, but has been in size 7 diapers for a very long time. They fly perfect. We are ready to switch him to pullups and I have no idea what size to get him.

BeautifulFish3431

My 27.5 pound 1 year old that is in a size 6/7 in diapers wears a 3t/4t pull up and still has a good amount of room. He's between the 2t/3t and the 3t/4t but the bigger fits better

2 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·22. März um 00:00

·

On the go strategies

Keep the potty easily accessible (not buried in luggage)

Use the car trunk or backseat for quick potty stops

Line car seat with a waterproof pad just in case

Don't hesitate to pull over—waiting too long = accidents

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·21. März um 22:00

.

Stick to a Loose Routine

Offer potty breaks every 1–2 hours, even if they say no

Always try before:

leaving a location

getting in the car

naps or meals

Amanda Jayne Watts

21. März um 19:55

Hello. My nearly three year old girl has been potty trained for about a month now. We've had complete success and she just got it. For the past two days she's been having lots of accidents. Mainly being distracted. My question is, is this normal for them to fall back a bit? Thanks

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

21. März um 18:00

Here are some travel tips for travelling while potty training.

Pack a "potty kit": wipes, extra clothes, plastic bags, hand sanitizer

Bring a portable potty or foldable seat (lifesaver for emergencies)

Dress your child in easy-off clothing (elastic waist, no overalls)

Consider training pants or pull-ups for the trip only if needed

Aleigha Hall

21. März um 17:01

My girl is 3, turning 4 in october. We started potty training at 2. She does great with pee, but doesn't want to go poop on the toilet. She tells me she knows what her potty feelings are, and can feel when she has to pee or poop, and she understands poop goes in the potty. Ive tried sticker charts, ive tried sweets, ive tried screen time as rewards, ive started over with the bottomless method like 5 times. We keep accidents at a neutral tone, and praise success. She's very ahead in her speech and general comprehension. I want to cry. What am I doing wrong!!

Anonymes Mitglied 914

You're not doing anything wrong this is very common, especially with poop. Pee and poop use different muscles and feelings, and a lot of kids this age just aren't emotionally ready yet, even if they fully understand it.

A few things that often help:

- Reduce pressure: If she senses how important it is, she may resist more. Stay calm and matter of fact.
- Let her poop in a pull up (for now): Have her sit on the toilet while wearing it so she gets used to the position without fear.
- Watch for timing: If she usually goes at a certain time, have her sit then no forcing, just routine.
- Talk about it casually: Some kids hold poop because they're nervous about the feeling or "letting it go."

This phase can feel endless, but it's incredibly normal even for very verbal, capable kids. It usually clicks suddenly once they feel safe and ready. You've been consistent and supportive, which is exactly what she needs.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

21. März um 16:43

.

Struggling so much with poos on the toilet.

My daughter 2yr 5m has been potty trained since January. She now only likes to go on big toilets not the potty. We now have very few wet accidents. But we have not cracked doing poos.... She has done in total 1 potty poo and about 7 toilet poos in that time. She can spend all day sometimes telling me she needs a poo but as soon as we walk in the toilet she leaves again telling me she doesn't need to go when clearly she does. She waits until her nighttime nappy is on to go or sometimes (rarely) will have an accident. I have tried giving her prunes/ extra fluids in case of constipation, I have tried singing to her, ignoring her, offering rewards, reading stories, reading books about poo, celebrating successes (Inc wees) and nothing seems to be working. Do I just wait and hope she eventually will do it or do I need to be more proactive and change my approach? Help!!

Anonymes Mitglied 228

This is so common at this stage, especially with poos so you're definitely not alone. It sounds like she knows when she needs to go, which is a really positive sign, but there's likely some hesitation or anxiety about actually releasing on the toilet (the sensation, loss of control, or even the noise can feel scary). Since she's already comfortable with wees and prefers the big toilet, it can help to reduce pressure around poos stay calm, matter of fact, and avoid too much prompting when she says no. You might try timing relaxed "sit opportunities" after meals (no pressure to go), making sure her feet are well supported so she feels secure, and continuing gentle encouragement without rewards that might add pressure. If she's holding out for the nighttime nappy, you could gradually shift that routine (like encouraging a sit before putting it on), but often this is something that clicks with time. Consistency and keeping it low stress really do pay off here.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Ames Marie

Admin

21. März um 16:38

I know everyone struggles. If you need any help at all here's a link with a bunch of resources. Never ever be ashamed to ask for help.

As we are a world wide group it can be hard to get specific information on the resources that you may need. We recommend reaching out to churches, The Salvation Army and call 2-1-1. Here's a link that might help and if it doesn't you can let me know your city and state and i can look some up for you

<https://thefamilypreservationproject.com/...>

thefamilypreservationproject.com

The Family Preservation Project

Ames Marie

Verfasser/in

Admin

Top-Beteiligung

@everyone

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

19. März um 19:23

.

Progress report! How many successful potty trips has your kid made today?

Leslie A Morgan

0 🙄 I swear she knows how she just flat refuses.

2 Wo.

Antworten

SJ Daisy

21. März um 12:49

My son is 3.5 years old. We have been stop start training for over a year. He is currently not using the potty and prefers to use the toilet.

He never tells us he needs to go he just wees in his pants. We set a 40 minute timer and he will then use the toilet and generally he is dry in between timers. He is wearing pants.

He will face accidents at childminders even though they use the same approach us.

He just doesn't seem to care when he's wet. I've tried sticker charts, rewards, pointing out that his friends aren't in nappies etc.

I need help!!!!

Anonymes Mitglied 800

The "naked method" is the most effective.

Pick a week where you won't be leaving the house and do not put anything on him. No training pants, no underwear, no diaper, nothing.... Naked.

There will be accidents. Make him help clean them up. Set your 30 min. timers... and even if he says he doesn't need to go, you still put him on the toilet anyways and wait 5 mins. Have him blow bubbles while he's sitting there bc it relaxes the pelvic floor muscles and eventually he will figure out that feeling is what he needs in order to go. When he's successful at going potty on the toilet, give him his favorite treat (my kid loves m&ms), something small! When he's not successful and there's an accident, you get the treat and make sure he sees/knows that.

Most of all... be consistent. When he has an accident he helps clean it up every single time... even if it takes 15 mins and 3 temper tantrums. When he's successful he's celebrated, praised and gets his treat... Make a big deal about it and be super excited for him!! We did a "pee-pee on the potty!" Dance lol

Good luck!!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

21. März um 14:00

.

Sarah Faye Griggs

17. März um 08:18

.

Hey y'all, first time poster. Lol.

I'm hoping some boy moms may be able to offer some tricks to get my little guy potty trained. He turned 4 at the end of December. He is on the spectrum, and he's had zero interest in using his big boy seat, and keeping him on it is challenge. But he's at the age, and size pull-ups aren't going to fit him much longer.

Any tips, tricks, suggestions, or advice would be greatly appreciated. Please be kind. 🙏

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I do know that autism can cause issues with potty training, have you mentioned this to the doctor? Also we have a sister group Autism Awareness & Support that you can as well ❤️

2 Wo.

Antworten

Kristen Wishlow

21. März um 12:50

Recommendations needed for size 1-2T training undies. (Canada)

She still in size 3 diapers. I'm in Canada so would like recommendations that I can purchase here. TIA

Anonymes Mitglied

21. März um 01:59

.

Hello, my son is 26months old, non-verbal ATM, he removes his pull-ups and just continues playing,yesterday he removed them and made a wee and poo on the floor. Could he be ready for potty training and any tips for us?

BeautifulFish3431

He could be but pulling their diaper off is just a normal part of being a toddler it doesn't mean anything. My tip is to teach your son the sign for potty! My boy doesn't talk yet much either but I'm going to try to train him when he can do the sign for it

2 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

21. März um 02:00

.

Kim Gray

17. März um 21:44

My LG is now 2.5 & I have tried to get her on the potty for months now but has no interest.

Lynne McPherson

Then she's not ready leave it a wee while and try again. I have 5 kids I found letting them lead was the best way as they pick ot up much quicker my 4th was 3y1m when she said she wanted to wear pants she did and never looked back. My 2nd was 18months she hated thr feeling of nappies she was completely dry from the day she refused to wear a nappy again no accidents ever.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

·17. März um 04:25

·

Has your child decided they wanted to be potty trained out of the blue? What was the reasoning?

Cara Jackson

Yes. She's 3 & a half. We'd been trying to potty train for months with very little success. Then last week she just handed me ... Mehr anzeigen

2 Wo.

Antworten

Lauren Newell

18. März um 22:04

·

2 year old help!!

My daughter decided to go do a poo on her potty for the first time 4 days after her 2nd birthday which was end of Jan, so we thought wow let's keep it up!

She wears pull ups when we are out and about and for nursery and for bed. When at home she has nothing on her bottom half and she takes herself off to the potty when she needs it.

We are now mid March, do I need to be doing anything else or is how I'm doing it ok?

Just wondering when we should start putting pull ups on less?

Any advice please?!

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Definitely try and start using them less. Pull ups can cause confusion during potty training and can make her hold it until she has a pull up on. Try and only use them if you have to

2 Wo.

Antworten

Carly Horan

· Folgen

20. März um 16:42

·

Advice for training in pants

My daughter is great without any pats on and will use the potty or toilet without prompt. But the minute I put knickers/ trousers anything on the bottom half she just wees in them.

Anyone have any tactics to help this step? (as nursery insist she goes in in pull ups and every weekend she has 3days where she consistently uses the potty. Then back in pull ups for nursery so I know it's confusing her. They haven't got the staff to keep reminding her unfortunately and she gets super worked up and upset if she has an accident

Kimberley Everitt

Following as I have exact same problem

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

20. März um 17:06

.

So we were using underwear for our toddler and they were a little too tight so we got the same kind in a size up and now we are having accidents again. Should I switch back or just wait it out?

Samantha Tate

Wait it out or try a different kind. I wouldn't go back the size that is to small

2 Wo.

Antworten

Barbara Ann Shelby

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

20. März um 14:05

.

Thaynna Da Silva

18. März um 19:53

.

Am i doing something wrong !?

I've been putting theses on my child to start potty training so he can feel he's wet but they leak all the time 🤔🤔

Kayleigh Richards

I tried some of these and they never worked- he just used it like a nappy. I soon learnt the best was being at home and having nothing on the bottom and just looking for the signs when he needed a wee and getting him to the potty. I would skip any form of underwear until they understand they need a wee and are able to go to the potty independently before introducing underwear.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

17. März um 10:47

.

Bare or trousers?

I can't decide if i should let my child be bare from the waist or just have trousers on. I'm worried it's too cold to just let her be mostly naked all day. What are other people from the uk doing in this scenario?

Sarah Parkes

What about a dress/skirt?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

19. März um 16:57

.

Okay I'm on day 4 of staying home consistently using the potty. He had cousins over so he was struggling a bit yesterday with wanting to go and stop play time and overall has one pee accident and one poop. I have an appointment tomorrow how do I go about taking him out? Should I use the pull-up style diaper ?

We will be out most of the day. Should I bring his potty? 🙄 he's wearing underwear all day, going when I ask and on his own without being told.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Bringing his potty is a wonderful idea! That way you can stop and he can go when he needs to if no restrooms are around. Just pack some towels and extra clothes just in case

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Noori

19. März um 16:58

.

2 years and 8 months - where to start?!

Hi, my son is 2 years and 8 months and I want to start potty training him (I'm due baby number 2 in 3 months so keen to get him dry by then).

I have no idea where to start or what to do, are there any books any one could recommend that I read or does anyone have any advice. Are we saying just go cold turkey and put him straight into pants, sticker charts?!

Thank you xx

Crystal Logan

We've been working at it since September. Watching shows, reading, during Christmas break did the week with nothing. He unde... Mehr anzeigen

2 Wo.

Antworten

Elisabeth Lemieux

20. März um 01:59

.

What to do if..

Toddler keeps having accidents? She has days where she's decent at letting us know, or might go on her own. But then she'll have days where everything is an accident.

I know we shouldn't punish for accidents, but is there some kind of negative consequence or thing I should do when she has days where it's only accidents?

Jennifer Shacklock

It depends on how long she has even potty trained. You don't want her to become scared of the process. Say she has been using the potty for 6 months or so then she definitely understands her signals.

It's hard when they learn things. They progress and regress on a lot of things, many of it so small most don't even see it like a word there and gone and back again.

Just keep being consistent and try to remind yourself this is a temporary phase.

Good luck!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Melly Leigh Zee

20. März um 01:59

My 3yr old will only use the potty at school sometimes, how do I get him to use the one I bought? He tells me no lol

Anonymes Mitglied

19. März um 16:57

My 2year old is so good when at home and she's naked it from waist to toe. But once input her lose shorts or undies she wees on them. She's good at how she goes potty when she needs to for wees and poops. I don't know what else to do...

Anonymes Mitglied 112

Following as my boy is exact same and I don't know how to go around it when we're out and about xx

2 Wo.

Antworten

Leah Coldham

19. März um 16:56

Good morning everyone and thank you for adding me.

I have had 3 kids which are all grown up now and never had a problem toilet training them. They was all trained within a week.

My Grandson is 3 and half and is a nightmare for toilet training.

We started a year ago,

he was so good telling us he wanted to go on the toilet, in the summer he was watering my plants. which i don't mind.

for no reason he started wetting himself again even if you took him to the toilet , the thing is he knows he is going as he takes himself off and hides under the table or in another room. Same as poos as well.

it's so frustrating as he is a very clever boy.

Some days we have no accidents with wee wees.

if we're in the car he asks to go so we pull over. At home totally different.

Any advice would be greatly appreciated.

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

· 17. März um 19:20

Did you do night time potty training when you potty training them or waited til they woke up dry?

RubyTrapdoor42

Night time potty training isn't a thing. Kids naturally will hold their bladder overnight with time. A lot of it has to do with hormones as they mature. It is not advisable to wake them; you'll disrupt their circadian rhythm, which is crucial for this part of their development.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

· 18. März um 20:00

·

My 3 year old refuses the potty so hard, and she gets truly very emotional over any mention of her using the toilet. Why does she do that?

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Something about the potty must be scary for her. Is there anything you've noticed that could be a trigger for her?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·16. März um 19:30

.

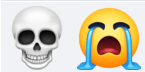

Yesterday my son said "I think Marci trying to be a dog or something" -- She had pooped on the floor

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

2 Wo.

Antworten

ResilientWallaby5917

18. März um 22:27

.

Anyone else have a child who is fully potty trained but holds their pee and makes it super frustrating for mom when you take them to potty but they don't go but you know they have to go bc it's been hours??? This usually happens to me in the mornings with my child. I try not to let it get the best of me bc if I'm frustrated it makes her have anxiety about the potty. I know that. But some days she gets the best of me guys and it's hard. Anyone have this issue?? Looking for tips to make this stop and tips to help me not be frustrated

Dria Bartel

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

.

sounds like my son hes 4 and sometimes he will hold his stuff for forever and day and ill try to tell him he needs to go but hes super adamant he doesnt need to go. and then when he finally does he'll get to the bathroom and have a struggle with his pants or whatever and then he'll be wet or the floor or something

2 Wo.

Antworten

Beth Ann Riley

14. März um 23:31

My son turned two on March 1st. Last weekend and this weekend he has gone potty in his diaper but then takes us to the toilet. He has us put him on the toilet, he sits there, wipes, and then flushes and washes his hands. He does it completely unprovoked and without us starting any potty training. We are assuming he is ready to start actual potty training? He has not actually gone on the toilet yet. Any advice before we start?

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I love this for you! This is the perfect sign to start potty training!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

15. März um 01:21

Hello! We have a 3 y/o boy that has no problems going #1 and #2 at daycare. However, we can't seem to find a way for him to go #2 at home. Evenings and weekends are always hard because he will almost every day have accidents and now he's at the point that he wants to hide the accident from us by changing before we notice making bigger messes. HELP! 🤔

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

Maybe take a break for a week or two. Sometimes kids just aren't completely ready yet and it's perfectly normal to take a break for them

2 Wo.

Antworten

Chelsea Nicole

15. März um 12:53

.

Day 3 of potty training today 😊

My daughter peed 8 times with only one little accident. We even picked out some big-girl undies today, which made the day feel extra special. I tried a little trick—letting her put her feet in a pan of warm water while the tap runs—and it worked like a charm every single time.

She's really starting to get the hang of it, and watching her learn something so big makes my heart so full. I couldn't be a prouder mama 🥰✨

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I love that this works so well for you! This is such a great idea!

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

17. März um 09:24

.

what are we using to clean up messes on hardwood floors?

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I LOVE natures miracle! It's really good at getting up stains and odors! I usually get the one that has the enzyme in it to help with the urine

2 Wo.

Antworten

Heidi White

18. März um 11:13

Just had a proud moment with my wee girl she said to me I have a wet bum took her pullup off and was dry so sat her on the toilet and she did a pee (was in pull up as she had been at kindy and then her nanas) we do use undies at home.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I'm so happy for you! Such a big step for her! 🥳

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·18. März um 17:21

Just wanted to say, if you're struggling with potty training and feel like a failure, you're not. Potty training is hard and you're doing your best 🙏

Anonymes Mitglied 601

Remember each child is different and stages could take longer or quicker than others either way dont give up show positivity and you've got this 💪💪

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·13. März um 17:17

For those that are letting your kids go naked for potty training, how long are they naked for? A couple hours or all day?

Joyce Casaldi

We did 5 days and it didn't work. Waiting a few months and going to do training undies. Because I don't want to train twice.

3 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

17. März um 20:43

.

Toddler took well to potty training had no accidents for over 2 weeks and now she is having random accidents up. To 3 a day, telling us she needs to go, refusing to go then going on the floor, or just doing it and continuing to play, is this a normal regression

Denise Marie

Id say normal mine has had accidents bc she wanted to keep playing even though shes generally done well for a while. Pooping on the potty is still a battle though

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

12. März um 00:28

.

Hey daycare moms, I'm needing some advice/reassurance.

My son is 27 months and we are starting potty training. He's doing well at home and goes (only standing up). His teachers approached me today and said he's absolutely not ready. They said they have too many poops in his pull ups and won't tell them he needs to go potty. We started over the weekend and didn't have a lot of time. I'm not expecting perfection but want him sitting on the potty. They will not allow him to until he asks to go potty. Am I being crazy for not being pleased with how they are handling it? They don't seem willing to help me on this.

Note: I work in the same daycare but in a younger classroom.

Sandi Tanase

Not crazy at all

I wouldn't give them any more diapers

He's your child if you don't want him in diapers. they need to respect that and do their part to help him. That's what they are paid to do.

3 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

18. März um 01:52

.

My 28 month old asked to go potty a couple of weeks ago and actually peed in his potty. Ever since that situation he won't take his diaper off, he even needs to take a bath with a diaper on. I don't know what to do. Seems like he is ready to potty train because he tells when he has a dirty diaper but refuses to stay without a diaper on.

Ein Moderator hat die Kommentarfunktion für diesen Beitrag deaktiviert.

Olivia Marquardt

Bathes in a diaper? That has to be a joke

2 Wo.

Devon Wallach

17. März um 20:42

Hi all, so i am reading a book about potty training and it talks about communication with your toddler and explaining to them about using the potty and stuff. But when I try and talk to my daughter or ask her questions, she doesnt either have the attention span or understand. I mean she is 3, but how can I communicate down to her level?

Bec Goddard

I announce when i was going to the toilet (we're a fifo family and i solo parent our 2.5yr old and 4m old for 2 weeks)

I found... Mehr anzeigen

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·16. März um 16:18

For those that chose to take breaks, what was the point that made you decide it was time for a break? And what was the point that made you start up again?

Amanda Easter

I attempted in February and, after 5 days took a break. He did a couple of wees on the potty day 1 but that was it. Nothing else on the potty and, by day 5, was refusing to sit on it at all. Will try again at Easter (2 month break) as he's showing more signs of being ready now than he did then when we thought he was ready the first time. It's the next natural chunk of time we have where we can stay home for a few days. Hoping for more success.

I was told that once you drop the nappies, you shouldn't go backwards but it just felt pointless - zero progress and stress all round. It made more sense to pause for a bit than try and push through.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

·17. März um 15:19

.

Happy Saint Patrick's Day! Does anyone do anything fun with holidays and potty training? Maybe give some lucky charms marshmallows as rewards today?

Ari Rae

My girl is using the potty chair. But if you're using the toilet, maybe dye the water green?

2 Wo.

Antworten

Rach Thompson

16. März um 14:42

.

Potty training book recommendations wanted for us to read to my little one so he understands about going to the potty/what to do on the potty etc

Jennifer Shacklock

Mine learned more from characters on YouTube faster than a book. Like PinkFong has a good song showing the animals pull the pants then underwear down before the potty.

Books helped enforce but the better the visual the more help it is. I only did videos the week before and the day of potty training to prepare my little.

2 Wo.

Antworten

Anonymes Mitglied

13. März um 13:55

.

What's the easiest method for toilet training

Chene Jonker

12. März um 12:35

Hi mommies.

So my little one is 22 months old and she's started to bring her potty from the bathroom to the living room then she'll say "mamma piepie" and sit on the potty. Is this a sign that she's ready to start potty training?

We did try potty training in December but she wasn't ready and just kept wetting everything 🙄

Mehr anzeigen

Stephanie Blair

It's a sign of readiness and you could start potty training her

3 Wo.

Antworten

Emma Wilson

17. März um 03:48

Looking for advice on how to keep my 2 year old occupied to stay on the toilet. He will sit and watch tv and go but it takes him a while to go. I don't want him to get used to needing screens to stay on the potty long enough.

Danielle Fouquet

Moderator

Top-Beteiligung

I'm not sure about the screen time part, but you should only let his sit for a few minutes at a time. And if he doesn't go, then try again in like 10 minutes

2 Wo.

Antworten

Adrienne McBride

17. März um 03:21

.

Hi y'all!

So I have carpet all throughout my apartment. What are we using to clean the carpet after the little accidents?

Thank you!

Anonymes Mitglied

A green machine!

2 Wo.

Anonymes Mitglied

17. März um 02:05

.

My daughter is 3 doing well with potty training for pee but is not getting that she needs to poop on the potty. She will tell me after she goes. Any tips? I know its fairly normal for poop to take a little longer.

Staci M Luman

I wasn't planning on training my daughter to poop but she has started to start on her own and has already pooped twice so I'm basically letting her do it

2 Wo.

Antworten

Nikki Jones

Moderator

Mitglied mit herausragender Beteiligung

· 16. März um 19:17

Anyone's child "graduate" from potty training? If so, how long did it take and how did you manage it?

Jane Williams

15. März um 20:24

Hi

Apart from upairy training pants, what other brands have people found to be good with training pants that indicate wetness but are waterproof too

Thank you

Kate Douglas

Tiny Tots Undies UK are a lot better than UpAiry, but are so thick that my daughter just treated it like a nappy