TRIGGER PHRASES

(sentences that get response) everyone else's kid seems ahead..

Potty training is the absolute worst. If I could've hired someone to do it, I would've.

I hear people complain about potty training being the most stressful week of their lives. Try living it for three years.

(I am) Being judged because my son (...) isn't potty trained.

I can no longer wipe the butt of a kid that uses words like "unfortunately" and "practically." This is getting ridiculous and I feel like a failure.

(note: pooping issues are not properly related to our product, but maybe we could refrain this sentence to Pee-related problem?)

We have a 3 year old and it feels like we have been potty training forever.

(we have tried everything) but still it feels like we're in the same spot as we were over a year ago.

it's been a disaster pretty much since he turned 3.

I know regressions are normal but this "regression" is going on 6 months now.

He'll come home from daycare having gone through multiple pairs of pants.

he is unbothered by pee prompting him to go will result in a major meltdown.

My toddler is impossible to potty train.

"... wait for him to be ready."

"Potty training days are BORING

Potty Training is Killing Me and Ruining My Marriage

F*CK POTTY TRAINING (respectfully)

Greetings from hell.

I hate potty training

Potty training is the absolute worst. If I could've hired someone to do it, I would've.

potty training is the worst thing i've experienced so far in parenthood.

I have a girl. She gives ZERO effs about being wet.

Potty training is a level of hell for sure.

potty training has had me debating whether or not i want another kid.

potty training might be mine and my partner's demise.

She is SO stubborn. "

I love my daughter man but she will not catch on 😞

All of my friends are successfully potty training their toddlers that are younger than her and I'm so over it.

(My son is almost 4 and isn't potty trained.) The comments I've received from my friends and family were disgusting.

People assumed I hadn't even tried (potty training). I had. Trust me.

I actually deleted a Reddit account due to the judgement I got from my struggles.

I got all kinds of pressure from my MIL, and my own mother (...)

I've spent thousands on occupational therapy and potty training consultants.

My son can't go to school. My doctor is completely dismissive.

My second nearly got me arrested on Thursday due to his resistance to potty training.

My partner is FURIOUS at me that she isn't potty trained.

METAPHORS

(How they describe the feeling) I feel like I'm losing my mind.

Potty training makes me feel like an inadequate, useless piece of crap.

seeing all of the posts here and in fb groups about 2 year olds who are already potty trained has me discouraged and concerned!

It's horrible. Worst part of parenting by far. 🤦

I'll keep trying once I regain some energy.

Potty training without success is so frustrating and disheartening!

(Son just turned 5) I'm embarrassed anytime I walk in that school and I get looks from the office ladies while I get my son and change him.

I feel bad for getting embarrassed but I do 🙄

I hate that I dont know how to help my baby 🙄

Sorry, I'm just ranting because I don't have anywhere else to turn to about this.

....I'm starting to feel ashamed when other parents see his diaper poke out of his pants at the playground."

This is getting ridiculous and I feel like a failure.

my husband and I getting frustrated, we made her feel pressure and she associated the potty with a bad thing.

The biggest hindrance for me was the frustration.

I feel so defeated and stressed out.

SCENE DESCRIPTIONS

(specific moments)

When i talk to friends and family about it they say their usual stuff "its gonna be okay" blah blah blah. It doesn't help. Nothing helps. I am a bad parent.

Playground Moment:

Noticing the diaper or pull-up outline under pants at the playground

Catching another parent glance at it

Pretending not to notice

Comments:

Hearing: "Oh... he's still in diapers?"

Friends saying their 2-year-olds are already potty trained

Family implying: "We didn't have to train you, you just stopped."

MIL giving unsolicited advice

Social Media Spiral:

Scrolling Facebook groups at night

Seeing post after post about successful toddlers

Closing the app feeling worse

Deleting a Reddit account after being judged

School Embarrassment

Walking into school knowing you'll have to change your child

Feeling the office staff looking

Carrying a change of clothes in front of other parents

Thinking: "He's almost 5."

Public Bathroom Stress

Taking child into a disgusting public bathroom

Smelling it

Thinking about germs

Hating every second

Comparison Spiral

Watching younger toddlers move up a class

Seeing another kid proudly announce they used the potty

Thinking: "Why is mine not there yet?"

Dual Emotion Moment

Loving your child fiercely

But feeling ashamed in public

At home he won't pee unprompted - he'll just sit in his own wet.

On Thursday we are at the grocery store and just about to pay when he starts doing the I gotta pee dance. I tell him we're going to go sit on the toilet and try. He tries to flee out the door. I sprint after him and catch him and carry him screaming to the bathroom. He is screaming like I'm murdering him, screeching "DONT TAKE MY PANTS OFF DONT TAKE MY PANTS OFF AHHHHHHHHHHH owwwwwww nooooooooooo", flailing and hitting me as I try to get his pants off so there's audible smacking noises. My hands are tied up so I just accept the hits because the alternative is him peeing in the car and he's already burned through the spares I had that day and I do not have it in me to wash his car seat again this week.

FAILED SOLUTIONS

(what they have tried)

Straight to underwear

Pull-ups/Diapers

Training underwear

Reward like "candy/gummies"/Bribes (sweets, M&M, ...)

3 day (no underwear) method (3day naked method) (well hydrated)

Oh crap (famous potty training book method)

Timer/Potty Watch

Cocomelon potty song

BusyToddler's guide (many different books on that topic)

Sticker charts

Peer Motivation

Daniel Tiger potty episodes

"Just wait until he is ready"

"Let them drink water/juice (alot) so they have to go to the toilet the whole day"

OBJECTIONS

(what stops them) "He's just not ready":

"He's not really showing any interest yet."

"You can't potty train until your child decides it's time."

"Experts say wait for readiness."

"Kids learn at different times."

"Pushing beyond their ability can cause regressions."

"Forcing before developmentally ready leads to issues."

"I don't want to stress him":

"By getting frustrated, we made her feel pressure."

"She associated the potty with a bad thing."

"Pushing too early can cause regressions."

"We made her feel pressure and she associated the potty with a bad thing"

"He just refuses":

"My toddler is impossible to potty train."

"He won't catch on."

"He says he doesn't need to go."

"He pees 60 seconds later."

"Resistance."

"She just can't be bothered."

We've tried everything -> failed solutions

"I'm failing/I don't have the energy":

"I am a bad parent." / "I feel like a failure."

"I'll try again when I regain some energy."

"I don't know how to help my baby."

"Missed the potty training window."

"I don't have it in me."

"It's normal":

"Every child is different."

"Late potty training isn't new."

"There is no right age."

"Some kids take longer."

"It happens at different times."

"Regression is normal."

"We're still having issues/regressions and there's absolutely nothing wrong with my kid"

"My husband gives in"

VILLAIN It's honestly bc of the whole "wait until your child is ready" propaganda from diaper companies
