

Deadline Pressure RS (m)

Preschool potty training?

Hi , I enrolled my 2.5 year old toddler in pre school and their requirements is for him to go to the bathroom number 1 and 2 by himself, i mean, take off his clothes, do his business, wipe and put back his clothes on\...to me it sounds way too Ludacris and kinda impossible, he's 2.5 years old\...can you shed some light plz.

260

.

251

Kommentarbereich

henrygeorgesmith

.

vor 4 Jahren

That is a very high expectation for a child of that age, neither of my sons were at that level when they were 2.5. Two year olds do not have the motor skills to be trusted to undress themselves and wipe thoroughly. That being said it's not uncommon for pre-schools to require that. The school system is all about pushing kids to develop skills before they're developmentally ready.

217

\[gelöscht\]

.

vor 4 Jahren

So much this!!!! My kindergartener is ready to have a melt down most days because she feels the need to perform on math and spelling tests already. I feel like school is one of those things that \"if it ain't broke, don't fix it.\" Mind you, this is a report card for Kindergarten in 1954.

52

henrygeorgesmith

.

vor 4 Jahren

Exactly! I remember getting hardcore judged by other parents because my sons couldn't read independently when they entered kindergarten. I had no idea that five year olds would be expected to read independently and pass spelling tests. It's getting a bit ridiculous.

33

\[gelöscht\]

.

vor 4 Jahren

Avatar von u/JustAContactAgent

JustAContactAgent

.

vor 4 Jahren

I find this to be an american thing at least in the \"western world\". By this I mean this obsession with getting kids to learn to read as early as possible. It's stupid because it has ZERO effect on how well your kid will do in school or how much they will like to read. I suspect it's purely something for the parents to show off. No one in Europe gives a fuck about this stuff and putting your kid in special \"gifted\" classes, or skipping grades or other crap like that I hear americans go on about don't even exist.

17

Avatar von u/BruhWhySoSerious
BruhWhySoSerious

•

vor 4 Jahren

Or maybe, just maybe, they want a good education for their child and push even if they aren't up to date with the latest in child education in every aspect.

Reddit is so god damned judgy 🧑. God forbid a parent think early reading is good for their child. What a fucking moron that mum and dad must be.

-2

Setze diesen Thread fort PENISystem

•

vor 4 Jahren

They knew what's up in 1954! Our modern kindergarten is an awful, intense joke

9

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yes! The history and creation of Kindergarten is actually quite fascinating.

4

Setze diesen Thread fort DuePomegranate

•

vor 4 Jahren

Tying shoelaces in kindergarten is pretty challenging though. I think most kids would have have to work on it for weeks, with lots of crying. "I can sew" is also on the list, which is a bit strange. Hopefully they mean big plastic needles threaded with yarn that you poke through paper with holes punched out, not real sewing.

3

irishjihad

•

vor 4 Jahren

Tying shoes at 5 is tough. And I guess lefties were banished from the school.

5

Warpedme

•

vor 4 Jahren

Lol at that report card! Thank you for that because I find myself constantly saying that my son is learning concepts in preschool that I didn't learn until elementary school

It literally just blew my mind that our preschool already has my son doing basic single digit addition and subtraction at age 4. He can't even read yet but when I said we have 4 muffins left he said "oh good, one for momma, one for you and two for me" like it was a normal every day occurrence for him to do math off the top of his head without thinking about it. He caught me completely off guard because I swear I just got him to properly pronounce all the letters in the alphabet song a month ago or so.

4

CiloTA

•

vor 4 Jahren

If what isn't broke? Nothing broke, the world hasn't been frozen for 70 years.

Your frustrations are valid though, there's a line that needs to be treaded between what is challenging and what is age appropriate. Children need to be challenged with concepts that are forward thinking and not stuck in a period that won't prepare them for the future but not at the entire expense of age appropriate concepts like learning how to play, socialize and hands on creativity.

My son wasn't potty trained until he was 3, luckily we found a daycare that took him at 2.5, and we had time over summer to get it down but not everyone has that luxury. Sometimes I feel daycares put these as gatekeeping to keep numbers low or not have to take care of other licensing that might involve diaper changes?

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

What I meant is that some things should be left as they were intended. Kindergarten is not 1st or 2nd grade, but today it is due to politicians afraid of losing elections over the \"education problem.\" If you read the history and purpose of Kindergarten, you'd see that the skills in the 1954 report card are valid and important for child growth and development. In his book, \"Boys Adrift,\" Dr. Leonard Sax talks about why kindergarten now sets the stage for kids failing in school, particularly boys. It can literally make or break the way a child feels about school. As someone who taught high school for ten years, at both general education levels and honors levels, I've seen what happens to these kids. You wind up with children who give up because they have no self-esteem and burn out too easily, and you have kids so crippled by anxiety and school pressure they break down in tears in the middle of tests and essays. Very few kids seem to be able to coast through the middle or make it to the top unscathed by the pressure of today's world. I'm not saying kids shouldn't be challenged. What I am saying is that we are expecting them to complete tasks two grade levels above their age.

3

Setze diesen Thread fort
edgebrookfarm

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yep. My kids were potty trained early (at 21 months) but still needed help wiping and with clothes for a while after that.

9

Avatar von u/DoYouFeelMe22
DoYouFeelMe22

•

vor 4 Jahren

What the hell was your routine!?

2 edgebrookfarm

•

vor 4 Jahren

I read the book "potty training in 3 days" and just sort of went for it. My husband took off on a Friday and it took about a week before they were somewhat reliable but both of them caught on by the 2nd or 3rd day with the idea. We didn't go naked bc we were trying to teach both kids at once and sometimes we'd find a puddle and not be able to ID the culprit so we went undies straight away.

8

Avatar von u/DoYouFeelMe22

DoYouFeelMe22

•

vor 4 Jahren

Going to get it now, thank you for responding!!!!

4

Avatar von u/DoYouFeelMe22

DoYouFeelMe22

•

vor 4 Jahren

Brandi Brucks?

1

Setze diesen Thread fort

Avatar von u/strcrssd

strcrssd

•

vor 4 Jahren

The school system is all about pushing kids to develop skills before they're developmentally ready.

You say that like its a bad thing.

Schools should be pushing kids to excel. Non-aggressive pushing, non-painful failures (failure is good in education, what did you learn from this failure\...?), and allowing kids that do excel to actually do so is what we should want. Only permitting things to happen when everyone can do it squanders the best and brightest by not allowing them to use their full capability.

That attitude hurt me significantly through high school and caused me to develop study habits that were not compatible with college\... Almost cost me a degree.

Edit: love downvotes with no actual responses that are responding to what I've said here, only what people are choosing to misread. Read carefully and disagree, I'm happy to have a conversation. So far every response has been a misreading, intentional or not, of what I'm saying here. I'm not in any way arguing that it should be required at this age level, hence my earlier comment \"Non-aggressive pushing, non-painful failures\". I'm arguing that the OPs assertion that it shouldn't be encouraged until everyone can do it is itself a problem.

-24

ascetic_aesthetic1

•

vor 4 Jahren

Being \"developmentally ready\" is nothing to do with having \"academic aptitude\".

Yes we should allow kids room to excel and not dumb things down. But toilet training is not the same as algebra, forcing kids to before they are developmentally ready leads to a lot of issues

23

Avatar von u/mobuy

mobuy

•

vor 4 Jahren

Even toilet training should not be done before kids are developmentally ready. Imagine punishing a 6- month- old for pooping in a diaper.

I always use the analogy of shoe size. Should my son wear a size 7 shoe?

Yes. That fits him. Should he have worn a size 7 shoe three years ago?

No, that would have been clown shoes!

Kids should absolutely be pushed. That doesn't mean we teach (most) kids about reducing fractions at 4, reading at 2, or statistics at 10.

7

Avatar von u/kmich06

kmich06

•

vor 4 Jahren

It can be a bad thing. There's a concept in developmental psychology called the Zone of Proximal Development, where the lower end is what a child can achieve unassisted, and the upper is what they can achieve with support from adults or more skilled peers. The ZPD for each child will be different.

Pushing kids beyond what they are able to achieve (with help) will not result in them excelling, and in fact may lead to attitudes and behaviors that result in underachievement: feelings of incompetence, learned helplessness, failure avoidance.

With potty training in particular, pushing beyond a kid's ability at that moment in their development can have really detrimental consequences for the whole process. Regressions, aversions to toileting, holding in BMs to the point that they actually damage the nerves in their sphincter. The term "anal retentive" was actually borne out of an observed pattern of some children holding in bowel movements as a means of control.

Ultimately, most of the comments in this thread are spot on in that if this is a requirement of this school, it's likely not a good fit for kids not at that stage of toilet training. All kids are different and holding them to the same standard (particularly if that standard is the one for the most advanced children) can be really maladaptive for those on the center-left side of the bell curve for a particular developmental skill.

16

ascetic_aesthetic1

•

vor 4 Jahren

Being 'developmentally ready' is nothing to do with having 'academic aptitude'.

Yes we should allow kids room to excel and not dumb things down. But toilet training is not the same as algebra, forcing kids to before they are developmentally ready leads to a lot of issues

8

strcrssd

•
vor 4 Jahren
Avatar von u/Schoolnurse mama Schoolnurse mama

•
vor 4 Jahren
Potty trained? Yes. Able to button/zip pants and wipe after #2? That\'s a little much. I would wonder if what they require \"on paper\" is the same as what actually happens in class. My daughter is in 3s and 4s preschool and they are required to be potty trained but the teacher will assist with closures on clothing and assist with wiping if the child asks.
202 VictoriaRachel

•
vor 4 Jahren
We never sent our child to preschool with buttons/zips for this reason.elasticated waistbands only.
128 apollo22519

•
vor 4 Jahren
I honestly don\'t see the point in putting toddlers in jeans and such. Certain occasions of course, but like they just play and whatnot all day long. I hate jeans as an adult and take them off immediately when I get home. I won\'t put my 3 yo in jeans or anything uncomfortable unless I have to.
56 Avatar von u/andysmom22334
andysmom22334

•
vor 4 Jahren
Same!!y sons entire wardrobe is sweatpants!
12 Ritualtiding

•
vor 4 Jahren
I live in Lululemon. My daughter lives in Walmart lemons. No one in our house owns a damn Jean thing and we're better for it.
12 Avatar von u/Confettibusketti
Confettibusketti

•
vor 4 Jahren

I love jeans on my toddler --- they're really sturdy and the thickness is great for if he takes a tumble. Protects the knees and mud won't soak through quickly.
6 Avatar von u/WhiteHotRage1
WhiteHotRage1

•
vor 4 Jahren
Word.

1

RaisingRoses

•

vor 4 Jahren

That\'s what I was thinking. My 2.5yo can push her trousers down and can wipe #1, but not #2. Pulling trousers back up depends on if the waistband gets stuck under her cheeks, it\'s hilarious for me but she gets very angry when that happens. 🤦

We\'re also currently going through a regression. She was ~95% dry for months, but now its like she just can\'t be bothered. To the point of me asking if she needs to go, she says no and then has an accident 60 seconds later. Racking my brain trying to work out the motivation behind it because she gives zero fucks about consequences like losing whatever toy she was playing with at the time. 🤦

41

srose193

•

vor 4 Jahren

When my daughter starts doing this it seems to usually be the start of a UTI. Just something to consider! She never complains of pain either, she just suddenly never wants to go and then ends up having full on emptying of the entire bladder accidents (as opposed to a little dribble) shortly afterwards.

22

RaisingRoses

•

vor 4 Jahren

I will keep an eye out just in case, but the current issue is #1 & 2. Most of the time it\'s #1, but she\'s getting something out of doing #2 clearly (possibly attention?) because she will inform you as she does it/immediately after and will say "poo goes in the potty, \[toy\] is going for a rest.\" It\'s very frustrating.

I\'ve noticed if she\'s constipated she\'ll have more #1 accidents too, little dribbles or half on the floor and half in the potty.

11

srose193

•

vor 4 Jahren

Ah fair enough! Solidarity friend, potty training is it\'s own version of hell.

11

Setze diesen Thread fort

Ok-Onion6670

•

vor 4 Jahren

lesportsock

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter has recently done the same, do you talk to her pediatrician for the UTI? I\'ve never gotten one (thankfully) so I have no clue how they would test and remedy it. Does your LO have other symptoms for UTI as well?

3

srose193

•

vor 4 Jahren

We just went in to our family gp. It's thankfully only happened twice. She had no other symptoms, it was very weird

3

Setze diesen Thread fort

Ok-Onion6670

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hi there, has she got a new carer? Does she have any medications? (My son lost control when he was out on a prescription drug, they didn't listen so he took himself off it and fixed the incontinence immediately.) Too many carrots? (They are a diuretic.) The hormones & antibiotics in dairy products may cause problems. (Goat milk is awesome.) These things fixed my children - 12x1 Biochemic Tissue Salts, cranberries with buckwheat and honey. 😊

0 superflychickadee

•

vor 4 Jahren

Definitely just pull up and pull down clothes for nursery, nothing that requires adult support

1

ChechoMontigo

•

vor 4 Jahren

« Ludicrous » because Ludacris be pimpin' all over the world

186 jenwiththepen

•

vor 4 Jahren

*poopin'

49 toreadorable

•

vor 4 Jahren

I just thought of a bowel movement going "when I move you move, Just like that " mrs_carlos

6

•

vor 4 Jahren

Typically the pre-k class has those requirements of being potty trained, and if they aren't there's a younger class you can enroll your child into, such as a "toddler room".

135

Repulsive-Worth5715

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son is 3 and starts preschool in September. I told the director we are working on potty training and he goes all the time when he is naked but will sometimes have an accident when he wears boxers. I told her I hoped to have him fully potty trained by the time he started but idk.

She said it was no problem if he wasn't and to just send an extra pair of shoes because she has had kid pee on them before lol.
Weirdly enough, I don't know any boys who were potty trained at 2.5. And my 4 year old still misses some spots when he wipes his butt as well 126

Avatar von u/aedelredbryнна
aedelredbryнна

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son was trained by 2.5, but definitely not doing the whole process by himself. He wasn't tall enough to turn on the faucet, for one, and I would not trust him to wipe poop (still don't yet, at 3).

48

Avatar von u/pshypshy
pshypshy

•

vor 4 Jahren

Give him a shot with wiping! I felt the same way but shortly before he turned 3, my kid started surreptitiously wiping on his own without calling for me and, miracle of miracles, we haven't had ANY skid marks (or toilet-paper clogs). I honestly was expecting lots of hands-on lessons and trial-and-error, but nope. We got him a stepstool for the sink before that happened---I think the ability to do everything else himself may have inspired independence with wiping. Now he only calls me into the bathroom on his terms, when he's bored on the toilet and wants to gab.

33

Avatar von u/aedelredbryнна
aedelredbryнна

•

vor 4 Jahren

I was thinking of letting him try wiping soon; he is doing everything else himself now. Thanks for the encouragement!

8

Dry_Mirror_6676

•

vor 4 Jahren

My 5 year old finally understands the concept of wiping a second time to make sure she got everything Lmao. I had to talk her through it step by step AGAIN a couple months ago.

32

ReasonablyDone

•

vor 4 Jahren

I have a nearly 4yo and what you're saying sounds completely age appropriate to me?

4

Dry_Mirror_6676

•

vor 4 Jahren

That's my point. That if 5 year olds still mess up, a daycare expecting a 2.5 year old to be better is ridiculous.

9

Setze diesen Thread fort MusicalTourettes

•

vor 4 Jahren

There are definitely boys who train younger (mine did), but he wasn't trustworthy wiping for well past that.

17

Repulsive-Worth5715

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yes, I know they exist lol I just don't any lol.

2

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Avatar von u/RNnoturwaitress

RNnoturwaitress

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son was 100% potty trained for day and night at 2.5 (daytime trained at 2). He's not able to wipe after #2 without making a mess, but it's definitely possible.

1

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

Mine started shortly before his 2nd birthday. Was done by 2.5. Hated having that stuff in his pants.

This late potty training is a new thing. I can promise 80% of this sub could meet this preschool requirement.

-16

mckeitherson

•

vor 4 Jahren

"Late" potty training isn't something new, experts have said for quite a while now that kids will let you know when they're ready vs forcing them too early. Congrats on having a kid who was ready to start before 2, but that seems like an exception vs the usual.

39

Avatar von u/DoYouFeelMe22

DoYouFeelMe22

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hate those types of comments...no such thing as late this or that when it comes to kids...what works for one doesn't always work for the other and boys potty trained before 2 is not the norm...don't shade parents who didn't accomplish what you did 😊

24

mckeitherson

•

vor 4 Jahren

I agree, the last thing parents need is more judgment from other parents. Some kids are delayed in speech, going potty, walking, or all sorts of things. I think hitting some of these milestones is more kid dependent than what the parents do to try and encourage it.

8

Setze diesen Thread fort

Avatar von u/StungByASerpent

StungByASerpent

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yea, seriously weird humble brag when parents think this is some sort of competition

22 wheredig

•

vor 4 Jahren

They didn\'t say anything about beating out the competition though. In fact they said the opposite, that they think most kids could meet the requirement.

4

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Rhodin265

•

vor 4 Jahren

Also, there's trained and then there's trained. My kids could all stay dry a few hours in the morning at 2, especially if there were scheduled potty breaks, but they weren't all 100% independently going by themselves.

20

Immertired

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yes. In my state most daycare's/preschools expect them to be trained by 3. 2 year olds have a lower student to teacher required because of lack of the requirements and if a daycare didn't push this requirement they would have to have less students in their 3 year old class, when daycare availability is hard to find and the ones operating can hardly keep enough workers as it is. On the other hand, they take them every 2 to no more than 3 hours. That doesn't mean that the kid is staying dry at night (I wake my 3 year old up in the middle of the night to go and she's so tired she probably doesn't remember it, but it prevents her waking up wet) it also doesn't mean that they will tell you they need to go on their own. Mine will flat out say she doesn't need to go, right before making a mess, but if I take her often enough, it's not a problem.

4

wheredig

•

vor 4 Jahren

People are mad you\'re speaking the truth!!

4

Avatar von u/RNnoturwaitress

RNnoturwaitress

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hard agree for neurotypical kids. Most 2 year olds are absolutely capable of learning to use the toilet.

4

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

Good call on the Neuro typical part, I do know that and the kids can be harder to potty train. Although I was a hard exception to that too. Then again my parents had no idea I was neurodiverse

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

You cannot „promise" that at all.

2

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

KeyFeeFee

•

vor 4 Jahren

Meh, super early potty training is really parent training, not kids. For me I don't count it until they feel the urge, make the choice to go, can remove and replace clothing, go and wash hands independently. My oldest 2 were between 2.5-3 when they really did that. Doing most of those steps for them doesn't count for me.

2

Repulsive-Worth5715

•

vor 4 Jahren

Well that's a good thing then lol

1

SleepingThroughIt

•

vor 4 Jahren

I don't know why you're getting downvoted. Later potty training means more money spent on disposable diapers. Money is always at the bottom of American issues.

-1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

This is a normal requirement of every pre-school I have heard of. You may want to find a daycare center for now, instead.

44

unikittyRage

•

vor 4 Jahren

Agreed. 2.5 seems really young for preschool even if they are potty-trained.

27

bicyclecat

•

vor 4 Jahren

My kid's preschool doesn't require potty training until age 4. It's worth looking elsewhere.

20

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

I\'m so confused. I\'m in Ontario, and when I was hunting for a preschool, not a single one required potty training. My son is in a program now (they do 2.5 years - 5 years), he\'s not potty trained, he\'s not ready for it, and they don\'t care at all. And I know there are other kids in his class who are not potty trained.

Is this a United States thing? Like, I\'m from Michigan, no judgment, I just never had a kid in the States (mine was born once I was already in Canada) and so never had to look into preschools there.

Plus I find it odd it\'s even a requirement! My son has ASD. It\'s extremely common for ASD kids to potty train late. So they\'re just screwed out of attending school with everyone else because of that? That just seems insane to me.

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

No idea. Every place near me that I have looked at (CT, USA) requires potty training.

As for ASD I am autistic too and had issues as a kid but I was not diagnosed until nearly my 30\'s. I do remember that I was not able to start regular school at the same time as others because of it and my little brother actually started kindergarten 1 year before me lol. BUT I did end up skipping 6th grade and 8th grade, so i caught up to the little fuck lol by high school.

4

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

lmao that\'s adorable :)

3 lurkmode_off

•

vor 4 Jahren

In my part of the US, at least, \"preschool\" usually starts at age 3 (and requires toilet training), and before that it\'s usually called \"daycare\" (and involves diaper changes).

3

SilverSealingWax

•

vor 4 Jahren

In my experience, this kind of requirement is a little softer than it\'s presented. As in, your kid doesn\'t have to have 0 accidents, but they do need to use the bathroom. And you may need to have daycare-specific clothes that are easier for your kid to deal with. Your kid needs to wipe, but the daycare workers will probably make sure the kid does a good enough job for #2. That said, do not lie to the daycare about what your kid is comfortable doing. They can tell and they will kick out your kid without refunding the deposit. If your kid is on the cusp of being ready or you're just nervous, you can buy some leeway if you're communicative about what you're doing at home to improve the situation. Though if your kid is not ready for this, consider that they may not be successful in the rest of the program either, if it's designed for kids that are at that level of independence and motor control. And to be clear, that's OK. Kids learn different skills at different times.

39

Azure_Shino0225

•

vor 4 Jahren

I work in a 3K program and yes, this is a normal requirement for schooling. However, I do still have children who are in pull-ups that have to be changed throughout the day. I don't use changing tables and instead help my students practice undressing and re-dressing themselves, including taking off their pull up and putting another one on just as they would regular underwear. Plus I am still coaching my students on wiping themselves which is a whole other skill set.

Truthfully, most of my female students came in potty trained already. The boys, not so much. In a class of 15 with 8 boys, only one came in potty trained, and I've moved about 5 out of pull-ups with 1 regressing back into them. Every child is different but our goal is for them to at least be using the bathroom independently by the time they go into our Pre-K program at 4 years old. In the Pre-K program, we definitely help with clothing (buttons, snaps, zippers or pants that are too tight), but we will not enter a stall with a child.

I would double check your child's program because it might not be as bad as they presented it.

35

dave_hitz

•

vor 4 Jahren

Before disposable diapers, children were typically potty trained much earlier. We had a Vietnamese aunt (raised in Vietnam) caring for our daughter, and the potty training began before she was a year old. The aunt noticed that our daughter would pee and poo relatively soon after naps, so she would pop her onto the toilet after every nap. When the baby went, the aunt would make a \"shh shh\" noise.

By one year old, I remember that our daughter would make the \"shh shh\" noise herself when she needed to use the bathroom. That meant that we had a minute or so to get her onto the toilet. We still kept her in diapers, but if we paid attention to her \"shh shh\" we could avoid a diaper change. If we were too slow, no big deal, but we did have to change the diaper.

I don't remember the exact age that she could do it on her own, but I think it was by 2 or so. Another comment mentioned the skill required for buttons or zippers. I believe that we just used elastic pull down pants to avoid that.

It's all about expectations. The US has gotten this idea that it's crazy hard to toilet train children early, but I think that's just because disposable diapers make it so easy to wait. Disposable diaper advertising has made it seem normal to wait. But most cultures during most of history have potty trained children as early as possible.

32

Countenance

•

vor 4 Jahren

Agreed it\'s a really fascinating pattern. I have a lot of patients from Eastern Europe and they potty train early by US standards. If you look at the research on this, average age of toilet training across the developed world has steadily been going up. I think disposable diapers are a huge component for several reasons but so is the different nature of homes and child care. It\'s easy in some places to just have a toddler go on the street if they\'ve really got to! And it\'s easier when kids are in smaller mixed age groups with family caregivers than in classrooms.

16

Valuable-Dog-6794

•

vor 4 Jahren

Diapers make being wet very comfortable. When I worked in a twos room we would beg parents to send their kids in undies with a pullup or plastic cover over them. When kids can feel the wet they potty train faster. In poorer nations they don\'t have disposable diapers. They have cloth so kids become more aware faster.

9

Avatar von u/ditchdiggergirl
ditchdiggergirl

•

vor 4 Jahren

Totally agree. Our daycare was hosted by the US branch of an Asian company and had lots of parents who came through on short (few years) international assignments. The East Asian kids pretty much all trained earlier than the American or Western European kids. (The Australian kid trained last, and his mother was tearing her hair out.) When I asked a couple of those moms how they did it, they seemed confused. They basically said "just teach", and they didn't understand why Americans made such a big deal out of it.

9

callalilykeith

•

vor 4 Jahren

I think the other reason we don't potty train early is because kids here travel differently. In some countries you can have your baby/toddler pee in public and walk places.

It's a different situation to expect a toddler to hold it in while in the car seat for an hour.

I do know someone who routinely drove their baby/toddler an hour at a time on the highway daily.

I also had a baby while living in an upstairs apartment, no yard, no washer or dryer. I looked into EC and early potty training and was like no lol. I had to get into the car to go outside (to a safer neighborhood to walk) or go out.

5

lesportsock

•

vor 4 Jahren

Totally agree.

If you're interested in early potty training, check out the elimination communication subreddit r/ECers. A big part of that is reading your LO's signs and doing something like shhh or psss sounds to encourage them to go potty.

1

Nightshade1387

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yeah---I've lived in Japan for about a decade now. One of my first jobs here was a daycare; I was very surprised that all the two-year-olds were already fully potty trained (pleasantly surprised as it made my job much easier).

Now I have a 1.5 year old. My MIL has been doing the "shh shh" sounds with her and showing her that her poos (from her diaper) go in the toilet. For my part, I let her watch me use the restroom and then I let her get some toilet paper to put in the bowl and then flush it. My husband was super worried I would wait until 4 to potty train our baby because he heard that's when Americans do it. I told him it wasn't something we insisted on...many people just don't think it is possible to be potty trained by two.

1

CrunchyTzaangor

•

vor 4 Jahren

My wife is Mongolian-Chinese and mostly the same story. I've heard the same from other expats with Chinese spouses.

1 chula198705

•

vor 4 Jahren

Being potty-trained is a pretty standard requirement for preschools. Some 2-year-olds meet that requirement, some don't. That just means that he's not ready for that program yet. Hell, my 4-year-old can't really wipe his own butt yet. I'd find somewhere else that is better suited for his needs right now, then try again when he is more independent.

26

ohmyashleyy

•

vor 4 Jahren

I agree. Daycares with preschool classes/age groups tend to be a bit looser on the requirements (my son was in diapers in the preschool class at his), but dedicated pre-schools that don't take younger toddlers tend to require it.

11

Avatar von u/oooooooooKillerTofu

oooooooooKillerTofu

•

vor 4 Jahren

This is not uncommon for preschool programs that don't have infant or toddler classes like daycares. Is it a part-day program? Like 3 hours before lunch? Maybe you can have him use the bathroom before and afterwards. Also have him wear pants and undies that are easy to push down.

13

Sensitive-Coconut706

•

vor 4 Jahren

It is not an unreasonable expectation. If your child can not do that they need a daycare not a pre-school.

12

CreepDancer

•

vor 4 Jahren

Preschool teacher here!!! Usually 2.5 year olds are encouraged to start the potty training process and are expected to be in underwear with minimal accidents before they move up. Teachers in the preschool classroom tend to be your child's potty coach, cheerleaders, and can help give tips and tricks for at home. Once your child gets into pre k they are expected to be able to go potty on their own, with minimal help because there are more kids per teacher (class ratios are higher), and the focus is more on kindergarten readiness. Potty training is laying the groundwork to give your child more independence, and allows them to be able to focus more on learning as they get older.

10

Avatar von u/MistakesForSheep

MistakesForSheep

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yes! My daughter potty trained about a year ago at 2.5. It took her all of a weekend to learn (we basically did the 3 day boot camp but starting Friday afternoon vs the whole day). I to this day am grateful for her center's teachers because they gave me some GREAT tips.

4

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

That's the requirement at my son's preschool too starting at 2.5. My son started school at 3 so he was already potty trained and able to go to the bathroom by himself but other 2.5 year olds are also going by themselves (it's a Montessori so there is a mixed age in the same classroom). All the younger kids are usually wearing pants with elastic waistbands, no zippers or buttons or anything complicated until they learn to work those. There is some assistance in wiping after #2 for the younger ones but a lot of it is giving directions from the door and having them do it themselves.

8

Avatar von u/ditchdiggergirl

ditchdiggergirl

•

vor 4 Jahren

Our montessori required that we dress the kids in clothing they could manage themselves.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

I work in Early Years and most of our kids begin toilet training at 2.5 and are, at the very least, fully pee trained by 3. It's unusual to have a child still in nappies after 3.

If he starts in 6 months? Reasonable expectation. If he starts now?

Unreasonable.

7

Mama-Bear419

•

vor 4 Jahren

Going number one and two, yes. But wiping their butt? In my experience with my kids, too soon. They could lift their pants up (didn't do button pants until older) after I wiped them, though.

4

Caity_Catxoox

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hi! Former prek reached to 2.5-4years olds here! In a formal preschool setting, I can tell you that these requirements are in no way a push to make your child grow up faster, but has everything to do with the facility licensing! There has to be a certain teacher to student ratio. If one teacher is helping a kiddo in the bathroom, that leaves the other teacher by themselves with all the other kids. Licensing also doesn't generally allow you to \"touch\" or pick up kids, so helping in the bathroom is a big no no. I worked in a licensed facility and these were the main reasons kids has to be potty trained. My 2.5 year old class though, was through a different facility and we weren't required to be licensed like other facilities. I was able to help with potty training if needed.

If you want to have your kiddo in prek now though, either look into a different program where being potty trained isn't a requirement, or start working with him now. I suggest no Pull-ups! They are too much like a diaper and with all the kids I've helped potty train, they don't care if they mess themselves in pullups! I suggest staying home for a long weekend and let your son run around naked or in big boy underpants. If he has an accident, have him help you clean up the mess. Also, I suggest investing in a potty watch! It can be set for 15-90min intervals that will play a song and lights up when it's time to try and potty! I had my daughter potty trained in 3 days with these steps! Best of luck to you!

4

Dbonker

•

vor 4 Jahren

We're potty training our 27 month old twins. They can do it, so I'm sure your kid can as well! It took a while and lots of learning on the way but you can absolutely do it.

3

YoMommaHere

•

vor 4 Jahren

Mine did too. Not all kids are the same I guess but I do know that many parents don't work with their kids as much as they should before they start complaining about requirements.

-1

Sgt_Cdog

•

vor 4 Jahren

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

Is he gonna be 3 by then.? That is a completely normal requirement. I mean, they know from kids that age to expect an accident here or there. Or skid marks. But 3 is a normal age to use the toilet my ones self.

3

Galileo_beta

•

vor 4 Jahren

Have you spoken to the teacher about this? My kids preschool starts at 3 and required the same thing but when I spoke to the teacher they basically said "we just say that but we know not all kids are ready and we'll help them if needed".

3

Avatar von u/Fair_Operation8473

Fair_Operation8473

•

vor 4 Jahren

Not to judge cuz this is not a judgement at all. But if your kid is not potty trained, that means ur expecting teachers/daycare staff to follow ur kid into the restroom and wipe them...which I'm pretty sure is not apart of teacher or daycare training.. u kind of have to have them potty trained to be in school. Logically. I understand it's not easy buy there are a lot of kids who get potty trained even at 1.5 years old. I recommend the potty watch. It helps a lot.

3

Avatar von u/gigglesmcbug

gigglesmcbug

•

vor 4 Jahren

That's a normal preschool requirement.

That said, it is young and if your isn't there, find a new childcare provider.

3 missykins8472

•

vor 4 Jahren

I'm realizing how great our pre-school is since they didn't require them to be fully potty trained.

They would ask to send them in a pull up with a change of clothes. But didn't even say anything about an accident or helping them go to the bathroom.

2

Waddyaknowaddyasay

•

vor 4 Jahren

They just need to be potty trained. They don't have to wipe their own butt. I am pretty sure. But they will have to wipe their own butt by the age of four.

2

Aggressive-Wonder140

•

vor 4 Jahren

My oldest wasn't fully potty trained until 3 or 4 my second baby is 4 and has been fully potty trained since 2 or 3. My point is every child is different, its not ridiculous they just expect every child to be the same which is ridiculous

2

Avatar von u/ohsoluckyme

ohsoluckyme

•

vor 4 Jahren

For our school kids are allowed to be in diapers in K2 class. Whenever you're ready to start potty training, you give them the go ahead of when you'd like to start and they help implement potty training while kid is there. In K3 they must be "potty trained" meaning not in diapers and actively going to the potty. They still help but expect the child to at least try doing all of the steps themselves. In K4 they don't help at all and expect the child to do everything themselves.

What you're describing sounds more like a K4 class. Perhaps they hope the child can do everything themselves with no help but realistically that's unlikely. At 2.5 my child was still having a couple accidents per day.

2

dncngshoes

•

vor 4 Jahren

Speaking as a former preschool teacher and also a mother of a two-year-old. That is definitely a high expectation. The school I taught at had the expectations that your child can recognize when they need to use the bathroom and ask to go. However, it was completely fine if they needed help wiping, undressing, or getting back dressed. Which is how almost all of my students were. It isn't impossible for a child to be able to do it all themselves at that age. I had a few students who could. The majority of kids, though, usually need a little help. My son for example can go to the bathroom, wipe, and wash his hands but he has some issues with undressing and getting dressed.

That said, 2.5 seems young to be putting them into preschool. Most kids at my preschool were 4, at the youngest they were 3. I'd suggest looking into some daycares in your area. They would help him learn basic skills like potty training while letting him socialize.

2

Nickel_City

•

vor 4 Jahren

At that age they could be potty trained.. but wiping? That's insane.

If you want to do a potty training method, I'm always always will recommend this book;

<http://ohcrappottytrainingwithjenny.com/oh-crap-potty-training>

2

Finney1313

•

vor 4 Jahren

(Raises hand) I work with preschool kids and I will give you the answer as to why schools want the kiddos to be potty trained by at least 3 years of age: most schools simply do not have the time nor the resources (i.e. enough staff) to attend to each and every single kid while they go to the bathroom. When I'm with the non-potty trained kids we spend about 80-90% of our time in the bathroom. It is exhausting and you feel as if you don't teach the kids a damn thing other than to rub their hands together to make soap bubbles.

If the kids can manage themselves for the most part, they learn SO MUCH MORE and guess what? Public schools have become much more demanding in a lot of ways- the things we learned in first grade are now taught in pre-k- so preschool teachers also have to up the ante in order to get the kids prepared. Developing a reputation that your students didn't know squat heading into kindergarten is a surefire way to go under. Most classrooms have an average of 8 to 15 kids with 1 teacher and 1 aide (if you're lucky) and a limited amount of time to teach the things that parents expect the kids to learn. Think about it and imagine dealing with 8 to 15 of your sons or daughters all at the same time with everyone needing their pants to go up or down, set up on the potty, taken down, wiped, flushed (a lot of kids hate flushing so you're going to do it) then hand washing and making sure you have all of the kids, dealing with accidents, clothes changing, sanitizing\....the list goes on.

Potty training at 2-3 years is completely doable if PARENTS work hard enough and remain consistent. Do not be afraid of the \"but my kid is still so small\" crap. Get a stool for the bathroom, a potty seat if need be, and go for it. Because, honestly, we don't have the time to do our job and yours, too.

Edited to add that my school requires the kids to be fully potty trained at 3 and for 99% of the kids, it works fine

2

MamaRobin1916

•

vor 4 Jahren

My almost 3 yr old is potty trained but if I don't help him put his clothes back on, he'll run around naked. But he does ask for help getting dressed after he goes. He doesn't wipe yet. Or rather I don't let him because he's a toddler, he has short arms 😞

2

Avatar von u/jenger108

jenger108

•

vor 4 Jahren

My 15m old is potty trained for #1 still working on #2. She hasn't worn daytime diapers since she was 13m, we still put her in nighttime diapers but she usually goes the entire night without peeing in it and wakes up to let us know when she needs to pee. Children are capable of being potty trained earlier than Americans have been lead to believe and research actually proves the longer you wait the harder it is because your child has become so reliant on them. I don't know where you live but majority of countries start potty training earlier than america. Also if you actually look at the research in the 1950s majority of babies were potty trained by 18m because disposable diapers weren't around and who wants to clean dirty diapers longer than you have too. Once disposable diapers were created marketing pushed to wait to potty train so the companies could make the most money and now the average age is 36 MONTHS!!! That's wild to me. The myth that 12m olds can't be potty trained and you need to wait until "signs of readiness" is very outdated and clear marketing ploy by companies. Now I'm not saying some kids take longer to start. There is no right age to start. It's like every other milestone, it happens at different times for every child. But my point is you don't have to wait.

2

stories4harpies

•

vor 4 Jahren

That is insane - specifically the part about wiping.

1

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

How old were you when you got potty trained?

1 stories4harpies

•

vor 4 Jahren

I have no idea but my 3 year old is potty trained..she can wipe for #1 but if the ask here is to wipe for #2 then I'm just baffled.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

I could maybe understand if they wanted him to be able to say when he wants to use the bathroom but ALL of that??????????? Wth

1

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

How old were you when you were potty trained?

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Not a clue but I have a 2.5 year old who isn't fully potty trained yet so no way they could do everything from start to finish by themselves.

1

Avatar von u/Budgiejen

Budgiejen

•

vor 4 Jahren

I know I sound like a Grandpa Simpson here, but it used to be normal to be potty trained by 3. I do remember my mom scrambling to get my brother to poop in the toilet before preschool started. She had hot wheels for him if he pooped. He finally did it right before they started. His birthday was in May and preschool started in the fall.

But most people who are currently adults would have been potty trained by age 3, starting at 18 months-2 years.

5

Setze diesen Thread fort

OriginalRaspberry_

•

vor 4 Jahren

Preschool educator here.

Perhaps these are what the educators are wanting to make sure the children can do before leaving?

Because these aren't realistic at all, especially for younger ones like your son.

I know where I am in Canada, they do need to be potty trained for school, but don't need to be for the preschool room. There are some that aren't ready until the summer before they go off to school.

1

RoseintheWoods

•

vor 4 Jahren

My school is like that. I\'m a parent and teacher. I fully agree with the policy, let me tell you why!

It\'s a Montessori school. We toilet train in toddlers. We teach the children how to dress, undress, button, buckle, zip, wipe... we teach it all, and the kids learn it. They do it! 2 year olds are so, so incredibly capable. Generally my kids are 100% (even overnight) done with diapers by 18 months. We practice fastenings outside of dressing/undressing, you can Google \"dressing frames\" to get a better picture. There are some really cute ones on etsy.

By the time our toddlers move down to primary rooms, they are 100% independent in the bathroom. It means that the rooms, teachers, assistants are set up to support independent children. Having just one child that needs help in the bathroom every time they go, really bogs down the system. Its noticeably disruptive to the whole day, and really monopolizes an entire staff member to cater to that one child. Primary rooms are not set up for learning how to dress and undress, they have more important, bigger work to attend to.

Toddler rooms are set up to learn how to dress. Its built into our daily schedule, there\'s open bathrooms in the rooms, there is a staff member in the bathroom pretty much constantly. Lots of chairs, benches, mirrors, and patience. Part of being able to move up is being able to be independent in the bathroom.

This is in no way a judgement. This is just how my school operates.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

At 18 months they are keeping the bed dry through the night?

1

Altruistic-Order-661

•

vor 4 Jahren

That was the norm for my kiddos pre-school. They are teachers, not baby sitters..

1

Avatar von u/SarcasticPterodactyl

SarcasticPterodactyl

•

vor 4 Jahren

My 3 1/2 yo just started potty training, he's pretty consistent with peeing on the toilet but struggles with consistently pooping on the toilet. I can't imagine a child a full year younger being that self sufficient to require no help.

1

Spunkei

•

vor 4 Jahren

That's ridiculous. My 4 year old still struggles with #2 in the potty. I'd never expect a 2 year old to be completely toilet independent, or even starting potty training at all (some can, but a lot of kids start later). I know for sure my own current 2 y/o couldn't get anywhere near those standards.

0

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

To me, that's not reasonable at all. We just now really started working with our daughter about wiping herself maybe around end of last year when she was 4.5yrs old. I am a SAHM so of course we can do it at our own pace and all but I mean I'm pretty sure at 2.5 we hadn't long been done with pull-ups. I'd be worried your child would have a raw bottom after being at that preschool.

0

Avatar von u/Sgt_Cdog

Sgt_Cdog

•

vor 4 Jahren

Expecting a 2 year old to Completely wipe is pretty unreasonable.

My 4.5 year old could pee by himself and clean up at 2 but he still needs some help with the final wipe or two.

0 freecain

•

vor 4 Jahren

Talk to the daycare and be honest. It\'s very possible this policy is loosely enforced or meant to push parents to select clothes your kid can handle on their own (elastic waisted for instance).

My concern: many kids aren\'t potty trained by 2.5. boys tend to be later. Pushing it too early can result in massive set backs. A parent recently swapped to our center because the old one pushed her son too hard too early.

0 dadsabrat

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter is 9 now and I had this same issue. She was coming home every day with so much poop in her underwear. I asked about it and they said they aren't allowed to help her wipe but they can stick her back with the babies if she's not ready to be with the toddlers yet. I was livid.

0

CopperTodd17

•

vor 4 Jahren

I'm a daycare teacher and at 2.5??? That's a ridiculous requirement to me. Some of my 2yos are tiny. Their arms are like t-Rex arms and would not reach far back enough! And the ones that can? Oh my god, the mess that gets created.... Of course we work with them and teach them, but also they are TWO and all children are at different stages of development especially at that age. I have some who only started walking a few months ago, I have some who are amazing at doing wee's on the toilet but poop themselves regularly cause they're terrified of "loosing" their poop in the toilet. (I read that they feel like their poop is a part of them due to them being in nappies/diapers for so long, so to not feel that feels wrong to them) and 2-2.5 is a common age for parents (at least where I am) to have another child so we often have regression over that massive change.

If this was a policy for the preschool classroom - 100% I'd agree. They're in "big school" the next year and obviously need to have all those skills for that, but 2? I can't agree and it shocks me that that's a thing. Maybe it's a USA thing?

0 frimrussiawithlove85

•

vor 4 Jahren

My oldest was just starting potty training at that age and he almost always needed help getting his pants down or getting up on the potty. Idk sounds like they have really high expectations for a toddler.

0

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

My first couldn't do that on his own until 3.5. My second is 2 and is fully potty trained since 20 months and not wiping by himself still. That's crazy expectations.

1

Due-Yogurtcloset-699

•

vor 4 Jahren

Is your son in preschool or daycare? I haven't heard of a 2.5 year old going to pre-k usually that's age 4 and the following year they go to kindergarten. If it's daycare usually the daycare help with that. Very confusing for sure, personally my daughter refused until she was a little over 3

1

Avatar von u/drinkingteal723

drinkingtea1723

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter started a 2s program in diapers (she was 22 months) and switched to pull ups around January and was potty trained by March but even now in the 3s they help with butt wiping.

1

BcImProcrastinating

•

vor 4 Jahren

We haven't even started potty training my daughter yet and she is 2.5 bc she has a speech delay that makes communicating when she has to go difficult and everything I have read says not to push until they are ready

0 tinctureteeny

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hi. I am an assistant teacher at a preschool/daycare and take care of kids between the ages of 2.5-3.5. Only like, 7 out of the 22 students know how to use the bathroom all by themselves. I do agree that that rule is a bit too harsh on the children

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

We have this expectation at the preschool at my school in order to encourage parents not to let potty training slip. By kindergarten they have to be completely autonomous potty users. We have these standards because we are a small private school, but even when I was in preschool most of us were already potty trained by three. It wasn't perfect, but I kept parents from getting upset with teachers for "touching their child inappropriately".

1

Avatar von u/thebugman10

thebugman10

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yeah, that\'s extreme. My almost 4 year old has still not got wiping effectively down.

1

Ianyat

•

vor 4 Jahren

Some preschools include potty training in the curriculum.

1

Avatar von u/Nicelysarcastic

Nicelysarcastic

•

vor 4 Jahren

Is this in the UK? If so, its against guidelines as early years settings are supposed to take all children irregardless of development stage. Also a big ask for 2.5yo!!

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

You can't potty train until your child decides it's time. What you can do is encourage independence in pulling pants up and down and making sure you have appropriate words for toilet training. I think I would look for another facility.

0

Avatar von u/International_Box835

International_Box835

•

vor 4 Jahren

Weird, I decided at 18 months both times.

2

JCivX

•

vor 4 Jahren

What the fuck is pre-school for 2.5 year olds? Maybe it's just a terminology thing, I'm not an American. But daycare is what I'd expect such a young kid to go to, not a school of any kind.

0

Okayest-WorkingMama

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son began potty training around 18 months. He's now almost 3 and fully potty trained but no way in hell would I let him wipe himself. He wants to try sometimes and that's great, but if he doesn't wipe well, 1. That's gross 2. His butt would hurt when, not if, he doesn't get it all. The fact they don't realize that is a huge red flag. They are there to help them and teach them and their expectations are far too much!

1

Heatherlee2019

•

vor 4 Jahren

I think that is the requirement for most preschools. It can be done but it is sad that it's a requirement at such a young age. My toddler will be 3 in July and she can go to the potty by herself wipe, re-dress, flush, and wash hands (with a stool) but do we let her go by herself ugh no! Just because they can wipe doesn't mean it's being done properly.

1

Leoch45

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son's early learning academy did the potty training for us in the three year old class. This was a structured school and everything but did not require the kids to go to the bathroom independently until they were 4!

Btw their potty training technique is the gold standard and worked like a charm If you want any tips.

0

Avatar von u/ditchdiggergirl

ditchdiggergirl

•

vor 4 Jahren

Gold standard? I've never encountered that as a descriptor of a potty training technique. But I would have been miserable keeping my boys in diapers for an extra year. That's a lot of extra diaper changes, and I'm really not a fan of diapers.

2

Leoch45

•

vor 4 Jahren

Lol they were consistent asf! Very structured but in a way that was fun and educational. Everything they did was the gold standard!

0

Eliz824

•

vor 4 Jahren

I've found that the expectations written down in the parent handbook, or even verbally stated by the administrators is usually more strict than what happens in the actual classrooms (or in this case, restroom). Then there's also the situation where my kids are significantly more independent while at school than at home.

My oldest was fully potty trained by 2.5: managed his clothes, attempts at wiping, etc.

My youngest had the gross and fine motor skills, but it was a battle of the wills to get him to agree to use a toilet. We had some digestive issues to solve for with this kid as well, and didn't push potty training until we were confident that his BMs were regular - no fair taking diapers away if he can't predict when he would poo. Plus I didn't want to do that laundry either. He turned 3 in March, and needed to be out of diapers before aging up into the next classroom. We finally crossed the finish line this past December, and quit night time pullups fully a couple of weeks ago.

In both cases, the staff in the 2 year old room encouraged them both to be as independent as possible while still meeting them where they were. They had the kids in pull ups and offered the toilet as an option, though did diaper changes when necessary, then helped kids change clothes after an accident if they were in underwear. I'll be honest, I haven't ever asked how much wiping staff did, but there was always a staff member in the bathroom to supervise and help.

It's similar in the 3 year old room - where my youngest is now. I usually pick kiddo up right after their last playground time, and they all stop to use the bathroom before heading into the classroom. Most kids are using the bathroom independently, though I have seen staff help put on clean/dry a kid after an accident, as well as I heard one parent discuss the continued use of pull ups for her kid.

Hopefully this preschool is just trying to make sure kids are well on their way down the journey of independent toileting, but will still meet your kid where they are.

1

mckeitherson

•

vor 4 Jahren

I guess my experience is different than most here, in that the preschools we looked at helped with potty training if the kids weren't already. Especially with kids being able to learn from their peers on using the potty which helped our daughter a lot.

1

mumofboys86

•

vor 4 Jahren

Depends on the pre school. Could be their rules. My son started nursery at just turned 3 where all of this was expected. He didn't wipe really at all or not effectively. He used to come out with skid marks or more in his pants.

They will not (or should not) have any issue with changing him should he have an accident.

1 down_the_rabbit_hol

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter is 2.5 and fully potty trained. If she says she needs to go it is urgent though. I think you should be able to.

I have a friend who is a primary school teacher of young kids and has many kids over the years who at 6/7 go to the toilet by themselves but don't clean up properly and need to sit in it all day. Yuck :(

Good luck :)

1

Glitchy-9

•

vor 4 Jahren

I wouldn't worry too much about poop because my son will only poop at home. He is 5 and not consistent with wiping yet.

He was potty trained at the daycare in less than 2 weeks because their routine and all the kids going regularly drilled it in.

At that age I think it's unrealistic for no accidents but something like a pull up until you're sure he's good would be helpful. And send a couple changes of clothes just in case

1

Avatar von u/Sjb1985

Sjb1985

•

vor 4 Jahren

I also want to echo that I think the potty training can be done, but if they expect them to FULLY undress that's dumb - esp if they are fully potty trained.

However, potty training always lends itself to easy to put on clothes so that should help. Joggers, sweat pants, no buttons or zippers.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son was potty trained at 2.5 so I wouldn't call it ludicrous, but that being said he was one of the first in his toddler class to be potty trained. He was then able to move up to the pre-school room sooner than most kids. I think it is standard for pre-school to require being at least mostly potty trained. You may want to look at toddler classrooms instead of preschool ones at this time.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son is 2.5 and in preschool, and they don't require potty training. None of the schools I have looked into do.

He's got ASD and his therapists tell me that while it's normal for children with ASD to potty train late, most boys are not potty trained by 2 years, contrary to what some people believe.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Practice at every diaper change- start with him building confidence pulling up and down his own pants and pull up. Once he's mastered that, have him sit on the potty "like a chair" while you change out the wet/dirty pull up for the dry one. Then have him stand and pull his own pants up from there. Eventually uuu can invite him to try peeing on the potty between changes just for fun, and let him take the lead from there. It's very possible, I've done it literally a hundred times.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

Remember, children are capable ! And 2 year olds are NOT babies!

3

Avatar von u/ditchdiggergirl

ditchdiggergirl

•

vor 4 Jahren

It may help to think of toilet independence as the milestone that distinguishes preschool from daycare. It's less about the age of the child, and more about the teachers and classroom.

Daycares are set up and staffed for diaper changes and toilet learning. You need a higher staff ratio if one teacher is often occupied one on one with a child who needs a change. When a child can handle his own toileting independently, he can move up to a classroom with fewer teachers. Of course there will still be accidents. For occasional accidents our preschool would call the front desk person to sub in to keep the class in ratio, but they wouldn't have been able to accommodate a child needing one on one help every day. The school had no diaper table.

Of course this says nothing about the child's academic needs and abilities, but at age 3 a good preschool isn't really about academics. So the school may say age 2.5 or when toilet independent.

1

Theyoder

•

vor 4 Jahren

I'd say don't stress if he's not developmentally able to do all that yet. Maybe he's not ready for preschool but a half day of daycare might be a better fit. It's often due to the staff to child ratio. It doesn't necessarily mean the child should be ready at that point, but a preschool program is likely going to focus more on the social and kindergarten readiness skills (those not being necessarily academic) than the daily nurturing and physical care needs.

1

Avatar von u/Relative_Age3013

Relative_Age3013

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yes normal for pre k. Don't worry though most kids do not wipe well at all. He won't be the only stinker at the end of the day but being in school will allow him to learn a lot faster!

1

Ellie_Loves_

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter is 2.5 and not potty trained. She likes to go to the potty, but she doesn't go potty. Just sits there for a bit (I sing songs with her to pass time/distract her in case she's holding it. Doesn't seem like she is) then wipes and washes her hands happily. But she doesn't know when to go potty, she often tells us she has to but doesn't actually go when we take her etc. She's far from undressing herself (though getting better at redressing! Hasn't mastered pulling things OVER her butt lmao)

I think 2.5 is still into the "learning, accidents happen" stage

1

Small-in-Belgium

•

vor 4 Jahren

Just a European perspective: in Belgium you can enroll your children at 2,5yo for (free pre)school. All kids have to be potty trained, but they should not be able to dress or wipe themselves. In fact, in our school, wiping yourself is not allowed until around 5yo.

1

WatchingApocalypse

•

vor 4 Jahren

You should never start a potty training too early. My friend did it with 3yo son and the result was terrible. Next 6 months he could only do his nr 2 in his pants, screaming from pain. He was too afraid to sit on the toilet and he tried to hold as long as possible. When he was playing with the kids, his body couldn't hold any longer and he was running in his toes trying to keep stuff inside. And he was screaming in terror. His parents always had to take extra clothes with them. It was painful to watch. All of this happened because the mom had an idea to potty train him during holidays. My son rejected diapers at his 3rd birthday. He was ready. But kids are different. You should change the institution.

1

K-teki

•

vor 4 Jahren

He's definitely not too young; most kids are potty trained by 3.

However he's also not too old to not be potty trained.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

My son\'s been potty trained since 2.5. he is 3 now and goes without asking first, he lets me know in the grocery store if he needs to go. It\'s possible, it\'s just a messy and involved process

1

Avatar von u/moglove

moglove

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughter started at a Montessori school at 16 months and she\'s just about potty learned (two years old). It\'s possible but needs a lot of work to commit to it at that age.

1

Avatar von u/moglove

moglove

•

vor 4 Jahren

She just went to her little potty and pooped in it as I\'m typing this so it\'s going great.

1

Avatar von u/salsasandwich

salsasandwich

•

vor 4 Jahren

While my kids were potty trained at 2.5, we were still helping them and wiping them for like a year after. They do try to wipe on their own in daycare but it\'s usually not very successful.

1

Avatar von u/emperorOfTheUniverse

emperorOfTheUniverse

•

vor 4 Jahren

We\'ve had 2 kids, both in daycare since they were babies. One has been potty trained and one is being potty trained now. In both instances, our daycare has worked with us and helped even. There\'s accidents, to be sure, and you have to take home the dirty clothes and bring back clean ones. But we just tell them our plan and where we\'re at, and they help. Our youngest is currently wearing underwear instead of a diaper, no pull-up, and goes potty with prompting (asking her if she needs to go every so often), and is working on telling an adult she needs to potty. Still wears diaper when sleeping. We communicated that to daycare and they just picked up where we are. Every day we pick the kids up and they tell us how the day went and hand us any clothes we need to wash, if any.

If daycare didn\'t do this, I\'m not sure what a person would do? Take off a couple months of work to potty train a kid? I know there\'s some quick methods out there, that sometimes work, that can do it in a week or so if you\'re lucky. Hasn\'t been our experience.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

This sounds ludicrous to me. I have a 6yo and although he would ask to go to the toilet when he needed from age ~3, he would still need help with his clothes and with wiping.

When he started 0-grade (5yo) there was a requirement that he could go to the toilet by himself at all times - and by then he was ready to learn, but still found it a bit difficult.

1

perkicaroline

•

vor 4 Jahren

That was the requirement for preschool for my kids. They were serious about it too- they made it clear that they would call for one of the parents to assist if the child had an accident or needed help.

1 fibonacci_veritas

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughters could both do it at that age, but of course poops need to be wiped by parents for a good while to get all the yuck off.

I don't know of ANY boys who could do both by that age!

1

Avatar von u/HopnDude

HopnDude

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yeah, our 4 (almost 5) year old struggles with the wiping himself. He half asses it, pun intended. He's been going to pre-schools for almost two years now.

He wasn't potty trained until maybe seven months ago.

Our 18 month old daughter is starting to tell us when she poops, so we're going to start potty training her shortly, but unsure if we'll get her to that point any time soon.

That school seems a bit harsh regarding early potty training.

1

Chelseus

•

vor 4 Jahren

Definitely ludicrous. My boys started preschool right before they turned 3 and they had to be potty trained but the teacher still helped them use the washroom! My five year old just started wiping himself like 6 months ago 🙄. Three year old definitely tries to wipe himself but is in no way effective at it yet.

1

Pollyjocket

•

vor 4 Jahren

I'm an early education teacher and we start potty training at 1. Some kids definitely have slower development

1

Avatar von u/boolambassador

boolambassador

•

vor 4 Jahren

I work as a toddler teacher and the kids I have are 2-3. Only my 3 year olds are potty trained, but they cannot wipe after #2 and depending on what they are wearing often need help getting undressed/ dressed. That is silly to expect 2.5 year olds to have mastered all of this.

1

Avatar von u/weary_dreamer weary_dreamer

•

vor 4 Jahren

There's states and countries that ban because it is decidedly developmentally inappropriate. Other than that, it makes me wonder what other developmentally inappropriate expectations the school has

1 minimamakins

•

vor 4 Jahren

I teach at a half day preschool program. We require all students in our 3s program be fully potty trained. We are able to verbally talk a child through wiping for #2 but we aren't allowed to touch them to help. It has to do with the licensure from the state. We recommend to parents that they send kids in easy to pull up and down sweatpants. Overall it goes very easily after the first few weeks.

1

Spkpkcap

•

vor 4 Jahren

Just enrolled my 2.5 year old and he starts next week. Luckily, it isn't a requirement to be potty trained because I put a pull up on him yesterday and he had a meltdown. Just letting you know, you're not alone lol

1

EO_711

•

vor 4 Jahren

My daughters preschool required that and she was fine, they had four classes of kids and all they were fully trained You probably will have to find a different school. Day care style preschools usually don't require potty training, that's what my friend had to do who's daughter was born right after mine, she just wasn't into the potty until almost 5 years old.

1

qfsksk

•

vor 4 Jahren

Yup, most schools will. If he's not ready then he's not ready for preschool. Have you tried an education daycare or Montessori daycare? My 2 year old attends one and it does not require potty training since it's casual attendance!

1

Misfit-maven

•

vor 4 Jahren

I don't know if \"preschool\" is different from daycare where you're at but that is an absurd requirement. Most daycares I have used will charge less for kids who are out of diapers/pullups but they certainly don\'t require toddlers to be able to wipe themselves or be fully potty trained.

1 wonder1213

•

vor 4 Jahren

That\'s ludicrous. At 2.5 kid might start telling but can\'t do without any help.

1

AlDef

•

vor 4 Jahren

Had to be that level of potty trained to move from the 2s room to 3s at the preschool my kid went to. Helped him to finally fully potty train once all his friends started moving up and he didn\'t. Agree with others sweatpants are the way. Best wishes!

1

\\[gelöscht\\]

Poster*in

•

vor 4 Jahren

How did he communicate that to you did you find him interested in finally going to the bathroom on his own? I am assuming you sent him with diapers first and then he started showing interest is no diapers? mine doesnt speak yet he communicates what he needs\\...

1

AlDef

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hmmm he\'s 9 now so kinda hard to remember, but even before he could talk we talked to him about going to the bathroom in the toliet, took him with us when we would go, honestly I think I talked to him about it while he was still an infant when I would change his diapers. He went to the preschool since before two so yeah, always went with diapers, but around 2.5 we took him shopping and let him pick out themed (like paw patrol?) underwear and on the weekends we would have him wear them and try the potty etc. We also did jelly beans rewards for using the potty. He had plenty of mistakes, and particularly didn\'t want to poop on the toliet. After his third birthday as more preschool friends moved up to the 3s class, we talked about it lots and eventually he figured it out.

1

KongZilla9009

•

vor 4 Jahren

Is this a paid preschool program or funded with tax payer money?

If you don\'t pay for it, why would you expect someone to clean your child after using the bathroom? That sounds kind of ludicrous to me tbh...

1

\\[gelöscht\\]

Poster*in

•

vor 4 Jahren

I am paying 350 a week!

1

KongZilla9009

•

vor 4 Jahren

Well I guess they don't think they get paid enough to deal with that crap lol...

1 kaktkuzkid

•

vor 4 Jahren

You could teach your kid to not go to pooty at school. Mom did that with me because I was scared as a toddler about Orcas coming out of the toilet to drag me to the sea.

1

\[gelöscht\]

Poster*in

•

vor 4 Jahren

hahahha funny but did you go at home though or did that scary from all toilet seats?

1

kaktkuzkid

•

vor 4 Jahren

Someone had to wait outside the bathroom to make me feel safer. It\'s why I had no issues going to pooty at McDonald\'s and other places that weren\'t preschool.

1

toreadorable

•

vor 4 Jahren

My school won't do any potty training in the room he's in now, which frustrates me since my kid is 2 now and loves to use the potty. In the fall he moves to the "2's" room where they work on potty training all the time. We go based on the school district age cutoff. There is no expectation for them to be potty trained the way you are describing until they are in the "3's" room. When they are 3-3.5.

1 caitcatbar1669

•

vor 4 Jahren

My kid is 4 and I still have to wipe her butt after #2 cuz she sucks at it. The poop stains! No way a 2 1/2 can do it properly. Go and pull pants down and up sure but wiping correctly? Noooo way.

1

oc77067

•

vor 4 Jahren

At 2.5? My son is 3, has pretty advanced motor skills, and would definitely struggle with wiping himself properly. Dressing oneself is a 3 year milestone. It seems like they\'re expecting way too much for this age.

1

Avatar von u/Chanellee213
Chanellee213

•

vor 4 Jahren

It's usually 4 years or pre k so sometimes 3. I'd go somewhere else. My son they helped with keeping the pottery training consistent at school . Meaning if he was at school or home we did the same thing. It was awesome tbh

1

Avatar von u/mom2hh1214

mom2hh1214

•

vor 4 Jahren

Our preschool required potty training in the \"3s\" class. But before that, diapers were fine. Which also meant if a kid wasn't potty trained by the time they were 3, they stayed in the 2s class.

My youngest went to the 3s class because she was no longer wearing a diaper, but she was far from potty trained. She just held it (stubborn girl and it fixed itself withing weeks after a bad night of sleep and an almost accident in her pants before school-its amazing what happens when everyone is tired and in a hurry and mommy won't put a diaper on!) throughout the day. Until the story I told happened.

I don't even know if the teacher helped them wiping, now that I think back on it. But 2.5 is way too young to expect everyone to be completely potty trained. My oldest was 3.5 (issues) before she was trained.

Granted, I couldn't put her in preschool because of that, but I wasn't planning on it (sahm) anyway.

1

Avatar von u/holographic_whore holographic_whore

•

vor 4 Jahren

That sounds really standard. If your kid is unable to do that I'd suggest sticking with another form of childcare until they can. I didn't attend preschool until I was 4 for this reason.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

If you want him to attend a pre-k that's pretty much expected. If you want potty training help you'll usually need to find him a daycare placement. The licensing requirements are different and a pre-k will be academic learning program, while daycare workers will be licensed and trained to handle toileting and other life skills.

Is this Head Start? 2.5 tome is too young for pre-k, unless your kid is a gifted learner who needs a little extra.

1

704ho

•

vor 4 Jahren

First of all, that seems excessive. I feel like at 2.5 they should still be assisting slightly with the logistics.

Secondly, I love that your phone seems to have autocorrected ludicrous to Ludacris (the rapper).

1

ambivalentwife

•

vor 4 Jahren

I will tell the Teachers that he doesn't have to know how to do these. If they are unable to change their policy then apparently they don't have time to gently / respectfully let the children learn natural human activities. It is very discouraging to expect a child to pick up certain skill that is obviously not at their level. Especially when it comes to toilet training. I let my child take lead for this aspect. I don't want to take away her bodily autonomy.

1

justagrilll

•

vor 4 Jahren

Most preschools require that & if they're not & you want them to potty train them then they charge more since they're doing more work. Kids can start to be potty trained honestly by the time they walk. But potty trained just means that they know to go to the bathroom, and go potty in the toilet, the pulling pants up, wiping, buttoning pants, even washing hands after tends to come later A lot of kids, especially If started sooner, tend to be fully potty trained by 2-2.5 But I do know some people who still have their 4+ year old in pull ups barely starting to potty train

1

Nightshade1387

•

vor 4 Jahren

I worked in the two-year-old room for a daycare and they were all potty trained. I was pretty surprised at the time, but yeah, I just escorted them to the restroom and let them do their business by themselves.

1 superflychickadee

•

vor 4 Jahren

I think some children will be able to do this. My daughter was extremely difficult to potty train. Our first attempt was 2 and 4 months. She was successfully potty trained about a year later. She is 4 years and 8 months and still needs reminders to go to the toilet, wipe herself, support wiping after a number 2, flushing the loo and washing her hands. This isn't every single time but definitely daily about at least one or two of these things. She is a very bright young girl but for some reason potty training was and is really challenging for her. Her nursery were really supportive, they knew that we were struggling with this milestone. She had a long amount of time of having accidents. Some children fly through this milestone in a matter of weeks, others do not. The early years provision should be aware of this, but some are not and set extremely high expectations for children.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 4 Jahren

There's no way most 2.5yo's can wipe themselves properly after number twos, the rest they can probably juggle as long as they're dressed appropriately (elastic waist, no buttons/zips), but wiping their butt properly, dreaming!

1

Avatar von u/adude00
adude00

•

vor 4 Jahren

Is wiping at 2.5 even possible?!

1

ElderflowerNectar

•

vor 4 Jahren

My preschool requires the same thing and my kid right now is going through a "need to take everything off below the waist phase". This is a problem as he refuses to learn how to dress himself still. Hoping they are lenient on this dressing self policy!

1

Yogi-Sometimes

•

vor 4 Jahren

My kid went to a preschool with a similar requirement. If he can't button/snap yet, just send in sweats! I got my kid ready by just taking her diaper off and putting her on the potty every 30 minutes-hour. If she had an accident and was wet she didn't like the feeling. We'd say "ewwy, I'm wet, I need to use the bathroom and change" ... within 2 weeks she was potty trained ... at 18 months. My younger two I potty trained at 2. It seems young because most people in my culture wait way too long IMO, but toddlers are very capable of being potty trained. It's also very important to give the kid attention all the time, but JUST when he wets himself. Otherwise he will wet just to get attention and never go on the potty 😊

1

Daddywags42

•

vor 4 Jahren

A friend wanted to have their children in a preschool that had a similar rule. She had them potty trained when they turned two years old. Problem is, her kids still have accidents daily and they are six and four. I really believe you have to wait until your kids are ready. Forcing it on them causes all kinds of issues down the road.

1

rostrurner

•

vor 4 Jahren

as someone who works in a pre school with this same requirement, there is never a situation where we wouldn't support a child to go to the toilet, the main reason we ask is so that we know they can communicate their needs. wiping bottoms and helping to pull trousers up is part of the job description tbh! (uk nursery btw)

1

Avatar von u/AfterEar8245
AfterEar8245

•

vor 4 Jahren

When my daughter started at her new preschool at 2.5 yo fully potty trained (never had accidents) they were shocked. She definitely needed help with her clothes and wiping at that age. Even now (4) she doesn't always do a great job wiping.

1

CrunchyTzaangor

•

vor 4 Jahren

In my wife's culture, it's common for kids to be potty trained by 18 months-2 years old. This generally doesn't include wiping though and split pants are common, especially for boys. It can be messy but it's possible.

1

Avatar von u/kyamh

kyamh

•

vor 4 Jahren

I'm pretty sure they are trying to tell you that they do not have the staffing or willingness to do diaper changes or to assist all their students in the bathroom. Sounds like if your toddler isn't ready to be independent in this way, this program may not be a good fit this year. It doesn't have to be a value judgement, they are communicating expectations but you can definitely decide that it isn't right for your child.

1

Moose92411

•

vor 4 Jahren

That is absolutely wild. To make it a requirement that children, especially after the disruption of Covid, can do all of that by themselves before age 3 is an exercise in futility. They'll end up with all upper class girls; girls potty train faster than boys, statistically, and wealthier parents can afford to stay home and get that process done with their children. Screw this preschool.

-1

Ok-Onion6670

•

vor 4 Jahren

Hi there, little ones are much smarter than we give them credit for! Just teach and in no time he will learn! Boost his nutrition levels with kelp sprinkles on mash potato and eggs. Also I found 12x1 Biochemic Tissue Salts to help in every aspect and of my children's learning and functioning. 😊

-2

Post 2:

'All pre-k applicants must be toilet trained'

Entschuldige, dieser Beitrag wurde von der Person gelöscht, die ihn gepostet hat.

43

•

51

Kommentarbereich

FetaOnEverything

•

vor 5 Jahren

The facilities needed to change diapers are very specific by law. Most schools switch from diaper changing stations to bathrooms by age 3. They can change a kid if an accident happens, but they just can't legally have a kid in diapers. When I taught 3/4, we still helped quite a lot in the bathroom and definitely with wiping #2s, but there would have been nowhere for us to change a diaper.

81

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

This. It's a completely different set of licensing rules and what is needed for changing etc. It is very common here for it to be requirement as well. Typical the room right before is where they really focus on potty training and those kids don't move out of that room until they are.

27

Muddlesthrough

•

vor 5 Jahren

Thats kind of fucked up.

-20

abishop711

•

vor 5 Jahren

Not really? The law requires them to have adequate facilities to accommodate diaper changes if they have kids in diapers. That's a good thing.

Most kids are potty trained or pretty close to it by the time they enter preschool, so it makes sense for a daycare to not go to the extra expense for that.

Accidents do occasionally happen for most kids throughout the preschool years, so staff are ready to deal with that.

14

Majestic_Complaint23

•

vor 5 Jahren

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

Yes. I don't know of any preschool in my area that will accept an untrained 3 year old. Two of my friends had to force the issue with their 3 year olds because no schools within an hour of us would accept their kids.

40 commadusarelius

•

vor 5 Jahren

My kid's pre-k also had this requirement. Staff was not allowed to change diapers or help wipe, so it was a requirement for kids to be fully potty trained. Pre-k was for ages 3 and 4, but was only half days.

24

MrsTruffulaTree

•

vor 5 Jahren

My kids started preschool at 3 years old and to be completely toilet trained. My kids were toilet trained, but still needed help wiping for #2. They were only in school for 3 hours so they rarely used the bathroom while at school and if they did it was only #1.

19

smilegirlcan

•

vor 5 Jahren

Our pre-schools have the same rules here. They also won't do the wiping. They don't have to be a pro. If they can wipe at all, the rest can wait until home time.

Only students with special needs (IIP/IEP) would wear pull-ups/diapers. Potty training is really a cultural thing. The average age for completion of potty training was 18 months not too long ago. In some places, by 36 months 80-90% of children are potty trained. There is really no risk or harm from training early (scientifically speaking). Consider not using diapers. Diapers, especially modern diapers, really create no desire to want to potty train. If he poops his pants, he can help clean it up. Not in a mean way, but in a way to create a connection between toileting and self. Using the potty doesn't have to be this big thing.

10

BobLovesTacos

•

vor 5 Jahren

My kiddo's school has the toilet trained requirement and if kids have an accident the kids change themselves. It's a protective measure for the teachers (which is sad that they have to do that but another post entirely). My son was fully potty trained when he started preschool and thankfully didn't have any accidents.

As for issues with #2 our pediatrician recommended a stool for the big potty that allows their feet to rest on something solid while they go. It really common for kids to be afraid of the toilet because they think they're going to fall in/feel insecure with their feet dangling in the air. Naked time also works pretty well. When we potty trained my son we just let him run around naked and had a baby potty available for him to use. We also tried to keep the pressure off by not fixating on the potty. I don't go into the bathroom with him unless he asks me to and we use phrases like "I trust you to listen to your body and what your body is telling you" when we ask if he needs to potty and he says no. Basically we try really hard not to make a big deal out of it and it seems to work well. If we get stressed about it he'll refuse to go and then have an accident.

8

Avatar von u/ria1024

ria1024

•

vor 5 Jahren

My (private) preschool expects the kids to be in pullups and understand the basics of pottyting - pull down, sit on potty, put back on. They don't require them to be accident free, and will deal with accidents until the kids are 100%.

8

Poctah

•

vor 5 Jahren

This is very common for preschools. Both my kids we're fully potty trained by 2 and a lot of kids are by 3(not all but it's pretty common to be). Also they usually don't wipe the kids so sometimes my daughter would come home with skid marks so I always checked when she got home. Anyways my advice would be to keep trying. It will happen eventually. If he can do #1 on the potty he can definitely do #2. Maybe try another toilet? The ones that sit on the floor worked well for us and then we worked our way up to the big toilet.

7

Avatar von u/athaliah

athaliah

•

vor 5 Jahren

One of my kids was not \"completely\" toilet trained at 3. He had a lot of accidents until 4. But he was toilet trained enough to not need diapers and make it to the toilet most of the time. He would hold in #2 until he got home, like he basically disappeared into the bathroom as soon as we walked in the door.

He had started a new daycare at 3 and I didn't lie to them about where he was at with toilet training, they assured me he would improve when he saw all the other kids going to the toilet on a regular basis and that some accidents were expected and not a big deal. I imagine some daycares would not have let him in though.

5

Avatar von u/WiggleWormDelux

WiggleWormDelux

•

vor 5 Jahren

My son also holds it in for days and days. He went to preschool March-June and he didnt even THINK about pooping there. He probably will hold it and wait to get home, I wouldnt worry about it. And lets say he does poop and they have a no wipe policy? Its not the end of the world, start getting him to put in some effort for wiping so he can at least make an attempt on his own.

5

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

It is pretty typical. My daughter's preschool recommended packing a spare set of undies and pants for emergencies and told me it happens to basically every kid at least once. And it did! She peed herself during craft time the second week.

The policy helped her get out of pull-ups, though. It was a real battle getting her to even try using the potty, and she had a long list of actual reasons why she preferred pull-ups that she'd explain to her dad and me like our brains were dribbling out of our ears lol. So when we started looking at schools and the potty training rule emerged, it really helped to motivate her to get her bum out of diaps and on the toilet instead. Maybe the same thing will motivate your kiddo if you hype up school like it's the best thing ever.

5

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

I\'m so confused\...you guys can get your kids into preschool at 3? Where I live, you don\'t start pre-k until age 4 unless your child has learning disabilities, then they can start at 3.

3

Poctah

•

vor 5 Jahren

The prek they are talking about is for parents who want their kid to have a headstart so they pay for schooling prior to kindergarten usually starting at 3. It really is just for them to socialize with some basic learning. Most people send them at 3 if they can afford it.

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

Oh weird! Where I live they literally call that head start lol and it\'s free!

1

Poctah

•

vor 5 Jahren

They still have headstart where I am. But where I am you have to either have a delay or be low income to get it for free(usually it's only kids with delays because the programs so full and low income kids get put on a waitlist and hope to get in). If your not any of the above then you pay for prek from ages 3-5 before kindergarten and it can be quite pricey so some kids unfortunately miss out.

4

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

Head Start acceptance is based on federal income and eligibility requirements. Some families automatically qualify by being enrolled in other govt programs, so they don\'t have to do the application or check their eligibility. But it\'s not free or available for every child.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

Preschool in my area begins at 18 months!

2

Avatar von u/gigglesmcbug
gigglesmcbug

•

vor 5 Jahren

Most three year olds suck at wiping, even if they can otherwise toilet independently.

There will be some rashes and itchiness. They'll get better.
Preschool teachers are good at talking kids through how to wipe too.

2

Avatar von u/warlocktx
warlocktx

•

vor 5 Jahren
we had to change pre-schools once because my son (but not his twin sister) wasn't completely trained by their cutoff. It had my wife in tears. He didn't completely get it until he was almost 4

1

Avatar von u/vermiliondragon
vermiliondragon

•

vor 5 Jahren
Mine went to a daycare that didn't require potty training.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren
Daycare and preschool are two totally different programs.

1

Avatar von u/vermiliondragon
vermiliondragon

•

vor 5 Jahren
Not in my state. There is only one type of childcare license and they can call themselves whatever they want.

5

Queen_Red

•

vor 5 Jahren
My daughter was completely potty trained before she was 2 1/2.
She started preschool a few months after that and she was one of the few that was potty trained in the two-year-old room.

1

CanucksKickAzz

•

vor 5 Jahren
My boy did the same thing early in potty training. Turns out that it hurt when he pooped because of too much dairy surprisingly. Once the milk/cheese intake was brought down by alot, it was much better. He still waits until the last possible second when a little turtle head is poking out before he goes to the toilet though. He's now 4.

1

Avatar von u/gluestick_ttc
gluestick_ttc

•

vor 5 Jahren
If it's part day preschool, your kid prob won't poop in those 3h.
My kiddo had some gross motor atypicalities that prevented him from using the toilet independently at 3. We asked our local parent Facebook group which preschools would accommodate this. There were a couple!

Some of my friends with 3yos who weren't quite there had an agreement to send their kids in a pull-up and the preschool would just call if there was a #2.

If you suspect there's a developmental reason why your kid won't poop on the toilet, you can get an evaluation done by your school district.

Toileting can be part of an IEP and you may have access to public preschools which can accommodate this.

1

AngryArtNerd

•

vor 5 Jahren

We have a not quite 2 year old so this was very new to me once I was doing research since I'm one and done and have no friends with young kids. We found a Montessori preschool less than a mile away that accepts them but I was shocked that most don't allow it, reading the comments here it makes sense. We are working on potty training now since she is having more of an interest but not rushing since I'm a SAHP for now.

1

claireisabell

•

vor 5 Jahren

Check your local laws/child care licensing standards/guidelines where I'm at a preschool can't exclude/not admit a child from preschool if they are not potty trained, it's a state law. However, I know of plenty of preschools around me that work very hard not to admit children who are not potty trained and depend on parents not knowing that.

1

Machiknight

•

vor 5 Jahren

5 kids, for them all going on the potty for 1 and 2 by around age 3, except for the fourth kid. She just would not freaking #2 until SHE was ready to do it. She's 4 now and does fine. This too shall pass.

1 wearenotthemillers

•

vor 5 Jahren

My daughter is 3 1/2 and toilet trained. She's also learning to wipe by herself. The daycares and preschools that I've looked at all require her to be fully toilet trained.

1

Avatar von u/jessmwhite1993

jessmwhite1993

•

vor 5 Jahren

Mine (4) has been potty trained since right before 2, BUT the whole wiping her own butt after she poops thing is definitely an issue 😭 idk what to do she starts school next month 🤞

1

Avatar von u/leomercury

leomercury

•

vor 5 Jahren

If possible, send her to school with wet wipes, and ask the staff if they could hand her a wipe after she already tried to wipe using toilet paper. (Make sure she knows not to flush the wipes or touch the wipes package with her dirty hands lol). The preschool I worked at used to do this whenever parents asked, and since we monitored them in the bathroom anyway it was a totally easy accommodation for us to handle.

2

Avatar von u/jessmwhite1993
jessmwhite1993

•

vor 5 Jahren

Ohhh that's a great idea thank you!!!

1

RosiePeaches23

•

vor 5 Jahren

My 3 1/2 year old starts pre-school in September and she is 100% pee trained, but we're also having issues with #2.

Thankfully, her natural schedule is to go in the afternoon/evening so she'll be home at that point.

What's really worked for us is incentive. Meaning home made mini-cupcakes. With frosting. She took one look at these delicious little things and decided that pooping on the potty wasn't that scary. (We freeze them once they're cool to make them more accessible). It hasn't been perfect. We've had a few accidents and more than a few skid marks. But we're trending favorably that in a month we might be okay.

Our preschool is also a "100% hands off" deal. They'll call me if she has an accident and I'll have to come to change/clean her. They also do not assist with wiping so we're prepping/training for that at home.

1

7148675309

•

vor 5 Jahren

My older son is 4. The class he is in - starts at 3 - you had to be potty trained. He does not know how to wipe but that has never been an issue because he never did a #2 at school until two weeks ago - and clearly they don't help wipe him. So I took care of that at home but he hasn't pooped at school since...

1

SquiggleMePengu

•

vor 5 Jahren

It might be area specific(to mine) and not available near you but my school system helps potty train in preschool before they move on to young 5's/K. Apparently this isn't the norm after reading the comments..

1 caterpillaronmyarm

•

vor 5 Jahren

Find a public preschool if available in your area. Its rediculous to force/shame parents and kids around toilet training. I am a former preschool teacher in DC under head start.

0 wonton_fool

•

vor 5 Jahren

My daughter\'s preschool has this requirement. When she attended last year she was able to urinate on the toilet on her own and wipe herself up, but she struggled with pooping on her own due to some health issues. I talked to her teacher and they were helpful - I live right down the street and they would call me if she needed help. They weren\'t able to change her pull-up but they could let me in and have me change her if needed.

I would talk to the preschool and explain the situation. Some are more accommodating than others, but I think there are plenty out there that realize that toddlers may be mostly potty-trained but still not 100% there yet at age 3. If you feel like your son is totally ready for preschool this year except for being able to poop on the potty, find a preschool that\'s understanding about the challenges of potty training. If you feel like he\'s not quite ready in other areas, consider waiting and putting him in preschool next year instead, when he also will have a better grasp on potty training.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 5 Jahren

If he still needs toilet training, you\'ll need to look for licensed daycares vs just preschools, the level of care and independence is very different from our experience!

1

Avatar von u/SillyRabbitBlue

SillyRabbitBlue

•

vor 5 Jahren

My son who is starting kinder still isn\'t fully trained. My other child going to second year preschool isn\'t either. They attend public school. I will have to have some type of doctors note for my dude going to kinder. However, they school was very helpful last year with helping us start and get on somewhat of a path of success. Anyway the teachers aid i think think helps with the wiping while encouraging the little one to \"help\" so they can learn.

1

Candid-Measurement40

•

vor 5 Jahren

We\'re holding off sending our son until next fall partly because he\'s not potty trained and we didn\'t want to push it tbh. He was 100% last Dec going pee and even pooped a couple times, then totally lost interest. He also became a big brother last Aug, so that probably didn\'t help

1

Avatar von u/grubbygoddess75

grubbygoddess75

•

vor 5 Jahren

Preschool/Daycare worker. Okay, so there's a few things you need to be aware of. Licensing, there's requirements for every type of classroom. My job is registered as a daycare and a preschool because we're a rural school, some schools and class rooms are not unless the child has a disability and then they'd have an aid. But, even we rarely accept enrollment for preschoolers who aren't potty trained. They don't have to be accident free, but potty trained. The reason for this is time and it's also a sign of the child being "preschool ready". Preschool is the first step into a school environment, it takes certain independence and abilities, (it's also still a very young age and kids grow in spurts so it's very common for some kids to just need a few extra months before they're going to be ready.) I'm not saying your child isn't, you know best! 💕 A factor of preschool having more of a school environment rather than a child care facility environment is the child to teacher ratio is typically a little higher, and there are more activities that require more supervision, structure and schedules. When a child needs to go potty they typically can take themselves with possibly some assistance and supervision, when a child has to have their diaper changed that requires one staff members attention entirely and possibly frequently, it also requires special equipment and space that preschool classrooms typically do not have. Changing a diaper could be an issue if it was during an activity that required a lot of involvement from the teachers. In a class of 15 children ages 3-5 we would typically staff 2-3 teachers, plus any additional staff if an aid was needed. Being potty trained is a sign of certain independence level and ability that is needed for preschool environments unless that school is equipped and staffed for the exceptions. It's also not healthy for them to hold it in, and as a child care professional, I'm not comfortable supporting that habit, because I want the children to have as successful a preschool experience as I can and equip them to be successful in school.

1

machair

•

vor 5 Jahren

jocelynster

•

vor 5 Jahren

Post 3:\

\

Preschool requires kids to be fully toilet trained before starting. Is this even possible? I need inspiration.

Our 2.5 year old is due to start preschool at the start of next year.

The two preschools we've looked at have a policy where the kids have to be fully toilet trained (going to the toilet independently for wee and poo).

My kid picked up weeing in the toilet pretty quickly but still hides when they do a poop; there's been little progress on that front. On top of that I can't imagine how I would even teach an under 3 year old to wipe their bum clean.

I personally feel like it's asking a lot for a 3 year old to be able to go to the toilet completely alone and wipe their bum clean. I mean, the preschools have 3 year olds there so I know for sure some parents are successful in doing so... Does anyone have any advice on working towards toilet independence with a under 3 year old?

Thank you in advance!

85

.

65

Kommentarbereich

Avatar von u/philligo

philligo

•

vor 3 Jahren

I would ask them specifically what "potty trained" means. The places I looked at said it meant they were no longer in diapers during awake time, but most agrees to assist them in putting on a pull-up for nap, and also specified they would help them with wiping when necessary (maybe there is something with licensing and not touching a kid's private... but then wiping themselves after pooping would be... not optimal).

109 abillionbells

•

vor 3 Jahren

I taught public preschool and our kids were expected to be potty trained, meaning they tried to get to the potty. Accidents were the norm, but not constant. Once the kids were used to the schedule we hardly saw any accidents. Like others have said, we don't touch their privates. I have cleaned some poopy legs in my day, though. We coach them, and honestly, they get pretty good!

58

Avatar von u/SnooWaffles413

SnooWaffles413

•

vor 2 Jahren

This is a year old, and I\m not OP, but I\m going to be a preschool teacher. I had applied for a kindergarten position, but I need a job soany advice on how to handle these situations and use bathroom breaks wisely? Our bathrooms are downstairs from the classroom, and that\'s quite a way to walk - it\'s horrible. \>:(They\'re putting air into our rooms, but I\'d rather they build bathrooms instead of air conditioning ngl lol 😊

The preschool rooms used to be downstairs and the bathrooms were close by, but the program grew and the rooms were too small so they swapped the rooms with the teacher lounge and printing one, which were larger. I know I\'ll probably get used to cleaning up accidents, but it\'s still scary to deal with. I\m glad I\'ll have aids and another preschool teacher. I\m packing extra gloves and wet wipes bc no way am I cleaning accidents with toilet paper only, they\'re cheap rolls and it would be a horrific mess. 😞

1

abillionbells

•

vor 2 Jahren

That\'s definitely not ideal, so you\'ll need a schedule. Build in a bathroom break into transitions - the nice thing is that it burns daylight! Luckily, most three year olds can hold it for a pretty long time, and you have assistance in running kids to the bathroom that need to go in between.

The accidents aren't really an issue. They sound gross on paper but it almost instantly becomes no big deal. Their clothes absorb most of the pee, they can change their own clothes and put their wet clothes in a bag, and it's not a big mess. I'd get a bottle of pet enzyme cleaner and decant it into a different spray bottle for carpet/rug accidents.

1

Avatar von u/SnooWaffles413

SnooWaffles413

•

vor 2 Jahren

It's definitely not ideal, but yeah, it is what it is. 🙄 In an ideal school, a prek classroom would have bathrooms in the same hall or even one in the classroom. I've seen one or two prek classrooms that had a bathroom in schools I observed for, and it's so nice!! Like. The best. At least I got a sink in mine? 😊

I'll do my best to build those bathroom breaks into transitions and make them routine so the kids can adjust to it. I'll also see what my fellow pre-k teacher does and see if that works for my classroom.

I'll put the pet enzyme cleaner and decant on my personal classroom list so I don't forget! Brilliant idea. 🙌

Thank you so much for responding to my comment so quickly, I really appreciate it. Have a good one, friend! Take care. 😊

2

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 1 Jahr

All of the preschool I've worked in have had bathroom in the classroom. However outside was an issue as we had multiple play areas but the rotated. However they weren't always near the classroom. There was one bathroom outside but as every class was using it we sometimes had to take kids inside to use the bathroom which was basically walking down outdoor hallway.

1

Avatar von u/Emiles23

Emiles23

•

vor 3 Jahren

Where I am most schools or daycares do require kids be fully potty trained for 3 and up. Despite me still wiping their butts at home at age 3, both of my kids ultimately did fine at school. They usually poop at home anyway, but they figured it out there. When I talked to my pediatrician about it, she recommended just doing a quick swipe with a baby wipe when they get home from school.

24

stories4harpies

•

vor 3 Jahren

I agree that it's a lot to ask for #2 specifically. My 4 year old's arms don't seem anatomically adapted to reach her butthole yet in all seriousness.

Luckily her poo schedule / natural aversion to pooping anywhere but home have meant I don't think she has ever even gone #2 at preschool.

The director at ours said teachers can help if they need it but some places have a policy of not I\'m sure for legal reasons.

33

the_lusankya

•

vor 3 Jahren

Some kids don\'t get arms long enough to wipe until they\'re six years old!

13

About400

•

vor 3 Jahren

Potty trained- yes

Wipe their own bum- maybe not, but many kids don't poop at school so this is probably less of an issue than you are imagining.

Source: my son potty trained a few months after turning 2. His class is 2-6 you. They accept kids in diapers but pretty much start potty training immediately. We actually delayed a few months just because we were traveling a lot. I think we started at 2y3m instead of 2y1m which is what they recommended. Pretty much all the kids learn quickly possibly because all the other kids in class are using the potty.

44

cunnilyndey

•

vor 3 Jahren

My daughter started preschool at 27 months and while she was potty trained, her teacher helped her wipe. Once she moved up to the 3 year old class, she had to wipe her own bum. She started the year not being very efficient at it (the stains were haunting) but she got better as time went by. We practiced a lot at home (and used M&M's as bribes 😊). We just went into a lot of detail about how to do it, how to hold the toilet paper, how much to use, etc.

9 llamacoffeeetogo

•

vor 3 Jahren

Mine is 3 today and has 0 interest in even sitting on the potty. My oldest was like this. We actually found the oldest didn\'t know what it felt like to need to pee and poop. It took us a LONG time to get through it. Kids really Learn on their own.

The prek she went to, wants them pretty far along in potty training. She still went in diapers/pull ups. You can ask the teacher before your LO starts.

30

stereoworld

•

vor 3 Jahren

Mine is almost 3.5 and it\'s the same for us. We\'ve had some minor success, but how can you train someone who has shows absolutely no signs that she needs to go? It\'s tiring and it worries us enormously.

Luckily our preschool is very passive about this stuff

6

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

It depends on the school.

I worked at a preschool and we had some almost 4YO still in pull ups. However then I went to a sister center and all of the 4YO were trained (was not a requirement, just how it was). Then I worked part time at a Transitional Kindergarten to 6th grade Elementary after school program (ages 4-12) and all of the kids had to be toilet trained.

Note: even at the elementary we had 3 accidents (Pee) that I remember. The elementary school also allowed the TK and K kids to use bathroom with out teachers supervision. Surprisingly they did way better then the 4th/5th graders

😬 One Kinder kid announced to the playground he went poop 💩 in his pants, but it was a plastic poop toy that he put in his pants 😬.

1

SummitTheDog303

•

vor 3 Jahren

Ours requires kids to be potty trained by 3. That means no diapers, accidents can happen but are infrequent, they can attempt to wipe but may still need a bit of extra help.

And yes, it's possible. My daughter has been day and night trained since 2 years, 8 months old. She still needs help wiping but that's attainable before she starts preschool in September (the only reason we haven't worked on it yet is because as a SAHM, it's just quicker and easier for me to do it for now).

6

Avatar von u/MontessoriLady MontessoriLady

•

vor 3 Jahren

I would say this is pretty standard. I'm a 3-6 teacher and all children need to be toilet trained by the time they start. Of course we help if someone needs help and prompt and take care of accidents but it should be a sort of rare occasion.

5

Avatar von u/wolf_kisses wolf_kisses

•

vor 3 Jahren

Definitely ask them what they mean by potty trained specifically. My kid is almost 4, he goes pee and poo in the toilet on his own and is even night trained (no peeing the bed) but even though he will wipe himself after going poo he doesn't get the concept of wiping until fully cleaned so if he isn't being supervised he will put his underwear back on with a dirty bum. He needs someone to "check his work" and make sure he is fully clean. I would still consider that fully potty trained, wiping is a separate skill.

5

tshirtbag

•

vor 3 Jahren

It is asking a lot. I teach a 2.75-3's class. All of our kids were in diapers until they hit 3, most being sent to school fully potty trained by the 3.2 - 3.3 mark. Most still have trouble in there alone with wiping bums and not missing the potty (the boys). They can expect lots of accidents, probably!

13

Avatar von u/figsaddict figsaddict

•

vor 3 Jahren

This is pretty normal. In a lot of schools/daycare the child cannot move up to preschool without being potty trained. Daycares near me will keep the child in the room below, until they are potty trained. It has to do with the ratio of students to teachers. Changing diapers every two hours is a lot of work. Some parents think of it as a "punishment," but it's not. It does normally cost more to stay in the 2's room. Staying in a younger room ensures that your child is being changed frequently. If he's starting at the beginning of next year, he still has 6 months to learn!

4

charlottie22

•

vor 3 Jahren

Just to reassure you- when my son was 2.5 I didn't think he would be potty trained by 3 so you are way ahead of where I was. But by the time he was three he was out of nappies even at night. It was so fast how he went from not even telling us when he pooped in his nappy to being trained. And I second people reassuring you that nurseries will help with clean up as long as the kids are out of nappies. My son still has accidents sometimes and it's fine. You will be amazed how much changes in the next 7 months

4

Avatar von u/itsprofessork itsprofessork

•

vor 3 Jahren

We did the Oh Crap method and then used a sticker chart to encourage pooping on the potty specifically. My daughter started a 3 year old preschool when she was 2 years and 10 months that required independent putting and it was no issue! (I think seeing all of her classmates going independently helped a lot).

7

alnono

•

vor 3 Jahren

Potty trained, tricky but realistic. Wiping own bum, well, it depends on the kids' size at that age. My son (3 this week) doesn't have long enough arms to wipe properly still! He's tiny.

3 abishop711

•

vor 3 Jahren

For our son's preschool, they required them potty trained for nap and for pee/poop.

In actuality, they are perfectly willing to bring a child to the toilet immediately upon waking to help with naptime dryness (and our son who frequently wakes up wet at home after sleeping has only had one naptime accident since september - I think they don't sleep as deeply there). They also will ask the kids to wipe their bottom after pooping but will "check" with a wipe after.

It was doable! We started potty training on 4th of July weekend and he started preschool at the beginning of september just a couple weeks shy of 3yo. No problems! We used the so-called 3 day method (used the book by Dr. Jazmine Mccoy rather than oh crap) and while it did take longer than 3 days, we were past the worst of it within those 3 days.

3 bettysbad

•

vor 3 Jahren

they need them to stay mostly dry during the day, and not need full intervention every potty time. our daycare let him wear pullups for a few weeks then we just jumped into underwear at school and with teachers help it wasn't too hard, he was daytime potty trained in a couple months. he was 3 turning 4.

i have worried abt the poop thing too, but it seems he doesn't poop at school or if he does he somehow wipes well.

3

Avatar von u/SylvanField

SylvanField

•

vor 3 Jahren

Our daycare required potty training before moving from early years (2 year olds) to preschool (3 and 4 year olds)

They hold kids back in early years until they're fully trained. However, they do most of the heavy lifting in potty training, as they don't have us keep the kiddo home during potty training.

Kiddo didn't have to be wiping on their own, just listening to body cues and able to pull pants up and down.

3

Avatar von u/badw0lfbae

badw0lfbae

•

vor 3 Jahren

My son is in the 3 year old class at his daycare. He is potty trained during his wake times, but still wears a pull up at nap. He is learning how to wipe himself, but still needs someone to check that he got it all. The requirements in his class is just that they are in underwear for wake times and can go (mostly) independently.

3

Avatar von u/acappy24

acappy24

•

vor 3 Jahren

Our center won't let the kids move to preschool if they're not potty trained, meaning can remove clothes, sit, wipe, put clothes back on and wash hands. I think if they really need help (like depending on difficult clothing or if they pooped) teachers can help but otherwise they're expected to be independent. I think this is a common requirement from what I've heard. My 3yo just moved up to the preschool room, where she will remain through the next school year, and some of the kids from the younger class had to stay while she moved up sooner since they aren't fully potty trained yet, still in pull ups while awake. A lot can change in the next few months for your child! School is also totally different. She's so much more easygoing and compliant when it comes to going to the bathroom at school vs at home

3

Avatar von u/Senator_Mittens Senator_Mittens

•

vor 3 Jahren

Lots of kids are potty trained by 3. We did a 3 day method a few weeks before my son turned 2 and he was out of diapers from then on. Obviously the next few months required a lot of prompting but by 2.5 he was pretty reliable. By 3 he was just going on his own.

3

Avatar von u/leorio2020 leorio2020

•

vor 3 Jahren

Our school has a policy that to move to the 3 year old room, they have to be out of diapers. We had no issues with my daughter. Her teacher trained her and all of her friends. My daughter had assistance to wipe in the 3-3.5 year old room. By 3.5, they all wipe independently.

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 3 Jahren

Check out the book \"diaper free before 3\". It's very much possible and years ago was the norm. It's only since disposable diapers have become popular that we've pushed potty training further and further back. When we had to deal with traditional cloth nappies (and no washing machines!) Toddlers were potty trained much younger. To see a 3 year old wearing nappies back in the day would have been a huge shocker! We did Montessori style \"toilet learning\" (slow and steady approach) and she was trained by 2.5, accident free and independently using the toilet by 3.

3

rayeis

•

vor 3 Jahren

I asked my mom how old I was when I was fully potty trained and her answer was she wasn't sure, but it was before my little brother was born! I was 2.2 when he was born. She didn't want two in diapers at the same time so started training me early when she found out she was pregnant. Practicality queen. My brother took longer and at my old center we had one child still working on it at 5, but he was a special case due to his outside of school circumstances.

1

Avatar von u/sk613
sk613

•

vor 3 Jahren

Most 3 year old preschools I know of require potty training, but they'll still wipe after a poop and allow pull ups for naptime.

Definitely speak to them about what's expected.
(My very independent and trained 4 year old still needs help wiping after a poop)

3

Spankpants

Poster*in

•

vor 3 Jahren

Thank you to everybody who replied to this post! You have all given me a lot of food for thought. Fingers crossed my kid will be ready for preschool next year!

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 3 Jahren

My daughter took a whole extra year to not be afraid to poop on the potty. Peeing was easy but poop was a huge challenge for us. She went to preschool and she simply would not poop there...she would come home and ask for a pull-up. When she finally did go on the potty she still would hold it at school and wait until she got home. She still to this day prefers to poop at home (dont we all? Haha). So i guess my point to this is that depending on your child it might not be too big of an issue if the poop thing isnt totally sorted out before school starts...as long as your child isnt the type of kid who poops on their pants, my daughter was always the one to hold it in. She held her poop for an entire week once it was horrible, the only plus is she never had poop accidents.
Also i would talk more with the school. They might be a bit more flexible as 3 is early for all kids to be poop/pee trained fully.

3

Swimming-Werewolf795

•

vor 3 Jahren

It is the same in public schools in my country (mandatory by 3 years old, but some kids start a little before that depending on their birthday) and honestly, even if the kid is not fully trained by the time they start, the peer pressure is doing wonders! I would say if they are fine using the potty for peeing, you guys should be fine.

3 goldenhorizon86

•

vor 3 Jahren

Yep, my preschool made it mandatory that all kids be fully potty trained before they start. It wasn't an issue for us since my first was fully trained by 26 months and my second is now fully trained at 24 months.
I totally agree about the wiping, my first is able to now but doesn't do a perfect job every time, my second can't even reach back there yet, so we help. Preschool will assist with wiping if the kids are under 4 and with parental consent but once they hit 4, they have to sort it out themselves. My first just adapted to pooping at home. My second is only 24 months so her daycare still takes care of wiping her when she goes poop on the toilet.

What worked for me potty training wise was that I seized the opportunity the second a little inkling of interest arose. Then it was just a matter of stripping kiddo down to nothing for a week at home to learn to listen to their body and pee/poop on the potty since the alternative is quite gross (and my kids are very precious about cleanliness.. Bonus!)

3

Avatar von u/blewdleblewde
blewdleblewde

•

vor 3 Jahren

Using a formal potty training method might be helpful for you. It's definitely possible (and the norm where I am) to potty train at or shortly after age 2. It takes a couple of weeks, and it doesn't have to involve drama. In fact it shouldn't. Using a formal method might help keep you relaxed about the process, which is important for it to happen easily.

Honestly though, if you can stay chill about it you can just pick a day a week or two out to ditch the diapers and in a short while you'll be good. It's just a bit of practice and getting used to it. But certainly your kid is capable of it, and you're capable of supporting their learning.

They figure it out at school. They might prefer to hold their poops at least at first and do it at home. Wet wipe them when they get home, and you can put Vaseline on in the mornings to give a bit of a barrier to protect against bum rash somewhat.

It will work out just fine. It's not early. In our parents/grandparents days of cloth diapers, 2 years was when you did it. It went fine.

You'll be good!

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 3 Jahren

Mine was fully potty trained at 2.5, which for us meant she would identify when she needed to go to the potty and head there. They still helped her wipe and she still wore a diaper at nap

3 helluvabella

•

vor 3 Jahren

That was the expectation where my son goes to school. He started at 2.5 years. They will not go into the bathroom with a child. However, they did prompt a potty reminder. We started the year at every 30 min then grew to every hour and now it is only before recess. They let me send extra pants/underwear for him if he has an accident. He changes more now due to aiming issues than true accidents, but there was about one a month at the start. His wiping isn't the best, so sometime he has a little poop on him but when he gets home, but it isn't the end of the world. However, his best friend, who is also a very smart kid, isn't in the same place at all, even a year later. Kids are different. If you can't meet these expectations, it would be better to wait another year for school than set your kid up to fail.

3

asquared3

•

vor 3 Jahren

I know this is a common requirement but I\'m so glad it wasn\'t for our daycare because my son wasn\'t fully potty trained for poop until almost 4. And unlike many of the stories you see in comments, he had absolutely no qualms about pooping at school lol. For wiping, get ready for a lot of gross poop-stained underwear. My son\'s arms are long enough, he just isn\'t very good at it yet. We\'ve really emphasized \"wipe until white\" and washing hands after. Potty training is my least favorite part of parenting so far

3 linksgreyhair

•

vor 3 Jahren

I would take 4 years straight of newborn night duty if I didn't have to deal with potty training anymore!

2 godImissthegirl

•

vor 3 Jahren

My kid's summer camp (which is an extension of his school) said this in their enrollment materials, but when I checked in about it they said my son is fine. He definitely can't wipe and has pee accidents. If you're kid is at a developmentally appropriate level, I'm sure it'll be fine, just ask.

2

atomiccat8

•

vor 3 Jahren

Most of the preschools near me also require the kids to be potty trained. One of the main reasons we chose the school we did is because it did not require potty training. My son ultimately was potty trained by the time school started in the fall, but I was not at all confident about that when we registered in the spring.

2

Avatar von u/Loud-Ad319

Loud-Ad319

•

vor 2 Jahren

It can be done. The US lags behind, pun intended, in potty training - many other countries as part of their culture - get it done before 3 yrs. Research a little because you might get some good ideas- As a lead teacher, there\'s no time to potty train 12 prek students. -

2

Avatar von u/killernanorobots

killernanorobots

•

vor 3 Jahren

My son\'s school is that way. I assume it has a lot to do with teacher/student ratios, school/local regulations, and the teachers aren\'t equipped to spend all day wiping kids and changing clothes/pull ups/etc. They say that if the child can\'t toilet independently they can attend a daycare program but not preschool, as the focus/ratios/teacher responsibilities are different. Maybe that\'s just because all the preschools around here have waitlists and they\'re allowed to be \\"picky,\" though I always assumed there was an actual rule, I don\'t know for sure. Obviously that doesn\'t make it feel easier in your situation, but just to say that it is a normal requirement a lot of places, I think. Everywhere around here does it. I got extremely lucky that my kid loved pooping on the toilet from the time he was 2\-- he seemed to find it fun?? But I know that\'s mostly a fluke and a lot of kids are in your son\'s shoes. Even though we\'ve never had the fear of pooping on the toilet, certainly getting a good wipe is hard, especially if their arms aren\'t long enough. My son is 4.5 and only recently started truly successfully wiping himself. That said, I don\'t know if it\'s mental or what, but he\'s only pooped at school once or twice this whole year. (His wiping was good one time and mediocre another, but good enough, I guess). He almost always goes before or after class, which is convenient. I\'ve heard the same from other parents, so here\'s hoping there\'s actually something to that? That said\-- even if you can\'t get him super proficient at wiping, you can definitely help him to at least figure out the idea of it. Busy Toddler actually wrote about this!

3

Avatar von u/imLissy imLissy

•

vor 3 Jahren

I know here, places need too be licensed to deal with diapers. We ended up starting both kids late with preschool.

What was really crazy, when school I toured was a daycare too and they said they wouldn\'t take him because he was too old for the toddler room. His birthday was in September so he started kindergarten late anyway. The school was stupid in other ways, so it would have been my last choice regardless, but that made me angry.

2

Avatar von u/Financial-Many-3110
Financial-Many-3110

•

vor 2 Jahren

Y que pasa con los niños autistas, que también tienen derecho de ir al preescolar pero con esas reglas te das cuentas que no aplica para todos. En mi caso mi hija tiene mas de 1 año trabajando en eso y aun no lo logra, y si hace del 2 en las mañanas por la eliminacion de metales pesados.

1

batboxx

•

vor 2 Jahren

In Europe at least it's pretty standard, I don't think you would be able to find a pre-school that does not require children to be potty trained

1 really_robot

•

vor 3 Jahren

I actually talked to the head of the school when I was looking into it, and she said that while they are required to put that, it\'s pretty common to allow kids who aren\'t fully trained to join. My daughter was late to the potty game and only became trained at all in December at 3y8m, and only recently trying to wipe clean. She\'s been in preschool for a year and a half now. They were happy to have her, even without being toilet trained.

Try talking to the teachers. Maybe they can help you or tell you it isn\'t a concrete requirement.

1

Avatar von u/Ok_Zebra_137

Ok_Zebra_137

•

vor 2 Jahren

You are saying that it's asking a lot for your OWN child to be potty trained??? You're a joke thinking that it's the teachers responsibly to wipe your kids ass... They teach subjects!!! Not ass wiping!! it's YOUR JOB as a parent TO TEACH IT TO YOUR OWN KID!!! You're one of those parents who will down the line say the teacher touched your kids "bum" inappropriately too... get off Google and go teach your kid to use the toilet!

0

Just_love1776

•

vor 3 Jahren

Having children be potty trained by the time they are 2 is a matter of convenience for the modern world, and in most cases not practical or doable.

According to Zero to Three's website, "Some children are ready at 18 months, and others are ready at 3. While every child is different, about 22% of children are out of diapers by 2½, and 88% of children are out of diapers by 3½."

Pretty much meaning most children arent even potty trained until closer to 4 years old.

There's also statistics and evidence showing that forcing potty training before a child is ready can lead to all sorts of problems too.

So dont feel at all like you are behind or doing something wrong if your child isnt there yet. As far as readiness for preschool, you may have to wait a yalear until your kid is more ready physically or find a preschool that allows pull ups.

4

Lexigirl187

•

vor 3 Jahren

I thought you had to be when you're in pre k, at four years old you have to be fully potty trained. My daughter wasn't even ready to be potty trained to 3 1/2

1 maamaallaamaa

•

vor 3 Jahren

Extremely common. My daughter is going into 3k next fall and they require she be potty trained. And actually the daycare she is currently in requires they be potty trained before moving out of the 2 year old room.

1

Niratias666

•

vor 3 Jahren

Small toys for praise worked for us, very quickly

1 zelkova

•

vor 3 Jahren

We were in desperation mode when my son was around 3. He needed to move up in rooms due to behavioral issues we figured were stemming from boredom around younger kids. Within about a month he was good with it. We had been practicing here and there since 2ish but I listened to the Oh Crap Potty Training book and was convinced we'd just have to go all in. He moved up in rooms and has been great with it, thankfully. Good luck!

1

Alas_mischiefmanaged

•

vor 3 Jahren

Yeah my daughter still can't properly wipe her butt at 3.5. She came home with her first poop streaked undies last week so I'm trying to do a better job teaching her but I just feel like she's not gonna do it right for another year or so.

So I just stressed to her to please tell the TA when she's about to poop so she can get some help wiping. I think that's the best you can hope for with #2 TBH.

1

Lilla_Snigel

•

vor 3 Jahren

Seconding the "oh crap" method

Also sticker chart! Google image search "poop sticker chart" and kiddo can choose the prize they get at the very end.

Also, daily fiber gummies to help keep poop regular and soft. Toilet aversion for #2 can cause constipation and painful pooping which sets back the whole process.

1

Avatar von u/Professional-Walk774

Professional-Walk774

•

vor 2 Jahren

Any recommendation on the fiber gummies?

1 brandnewismysoul

•

vor 3 Jahren

My son was 3 when he started and they did not require him to be potty trained. However when he turned 4 and went to the next grade there were no more pull ups and they potty trained him. It was amazing. I love his school.

1

linksgreyhair

•

vor 3 Jahren

I've got a neurodivergent 3.5 year old who we can't put in preschool, daycare, or even extracurriculars because EVERYONE here says they have to be fully potty trained, totally independent, no pull ups, no accidents by age 3. We've been trying different methods since she was 2.5 and she's not even close to getting it. I just want to go back to work. :(

For what it's worth, medical professionals disagree with "potty train by 3 or else" policies. There are several articles out there by pediatric urologists denouncing them. But unfortunately that doesn't actually change the policies.

1

beginswithanx

•

vor 3 Jahren

I live in a country where most kids go to preschool starting at age 3 and are supposed to be "potty trained" by that time. However, what this looks like the kids are able to use the bathroom independently, but at school they are prompted throughout the day (set schedule), and accidents are basically expected. They just have lots of backup clothes ready!

When my kid started at 3 she had been out of diapers for like 2 weeks. Another kid had just switched that weekend. We got sent home a lot of laundry to do for a while!

They change a lot between 2.5 and 3, you still have lots of time. I'd just continue along your path.

1

Avatar von u/Nice-Web-8558

Nice-Web-8558

•

vor 2 Jahren

It depends where you are. I know that Australia NSW don't have this in their policies but I have come across some schools that say they do, I simply ask them to see it and it's not there. I have 5 kids, 4 girls and one boy. My girls were all trained by 2yrs old I then spent that gap between them learning and going to preschool the correct way to wipe. My boy who is nearly 3, I can't even get him to go potty at all, I've been trying for over a year now and every new technique I come up with never works, he's starting preschool in the new year (two months away) and I'm giving it everything I have and still nothing. I agree every child is different but damn this boy is hard work! I'm also putting him into a school which they told me nappies aren't allowed to be worn there and I've said I'd like to see the policies and it's not stated in there. But I'm still trying because I don't want him targeted because of my witts.

1

Kyle02NC

•

vor 1 Jahr

How'd it go??

1

June_Rose_68

•

vor 1 Jahr

I know this post is old but I now work for a public UPK class. I had a family come to visit who may be enrolling their 4 year old son. The boy was clearly wearing pull-ups. I asked my director \"doesn't he need to be potty-trained?\" She said \"no, that has changed, as we cannot discriminate\". I can understand if he were special needs (in which case he would be enrolled in a special ed preschool class), but who is supposed to change him? I mean, I have 16 students and 1 assistant. If my assistant or I leave the room to change a child, we are out of ratio. Can someone who is familiar with this please advise?

Post 4:\

\

potty training

were any of your toddlers not fully potty trained by the time JK started? my son will be 3 still upon entering and is very resistant to potty training. if any of you have been in this situation, can you let me know what ended up happening?

2

.

35

Kommentarbereich

lcbear55

.

vor 3 Monaten

It may vary where you are, but where I live, kids are required to be potty trained for preschool. There is an exception for kids in Special Ed preschool class though.

30

Avatar von u/dont_be_all_uncool__

dont_be_all_uncool__

.

vor 3 Monaten

If you're talking about TK at a public school, your child should be fully potty trained before sending. Don't make credentialed teachers change diapers. That's not what they're there for.

22

jmsst1996

.

vor 3 Monaten

My kids are grown but when my kids started pre school at 3 they had to be fully potty trained. No pull ups or diapers. And definitely for K. Only exception is for special education.

17

formtuv

.

vor 3 Monaten

My sisters son is a December baby and was starting school in September. He was potty trained by August. He did NOT want to do it. Then he did it a few times and he was good to go. He had a few accidents which is what my sister wanted to avoid but that's the only way it would happen. There's no way around it. You will need to potty train- there are no exceptions unless there's a disability.

Also if you're in Ontario JK isn't preschool it's considered kindergarten.

8 nkdeck07

.

vor 3 Monaten

Did she really think you could potty train with zero accidents? Like yeah it\'s not fun but that\'s just part of the process

6

formtuv

•

vor 3 Monaten

No she didn't that's what I'm saying haha. She waited because she was dreading the accidents. She pushed it til summer and that's why he was only trained a month before school started. Less accidents indoors. I don't recommend waiting until the last minute though.

4 singlemamabychoice

•

vor 3 Monaten

Totally unhelpful anecdote here: I hit the jackpot with poop potty training my kid, she pooped in the living room once, and RAN into the kitchen to let me know "THERES POOP ON THE CARPET THERES POOP ON THE CARPET" and she was so traumatized she never went outside of the toilet again 😂😂😂

7

Avatar von u/JamSkully

JamSkully

•

vor 3 Monaten

Lolz. My oldest son was fully potty trained like magic at about 22 months. Bought him some Spiderman jocks & that was it - but when he was about three I had a weird feeling about hand washing because I never really heard the tap running but (on inspection) his hands were always wet.

Asked him to show me how he washed his hands one day & (all excited) he ran into the bathroom, flushed the toilet, plunged his hands into the bowl & efficiently rubbed them together. lol lol lol 😂

2

TugaCan

•

vor 3 Monaten

Kinder teacher here. I had 3 kids (no issues) in diapers in September. After 3 very hard months they are all officially out of diapers. Please keep in mind as a teacher I cannot touch them. We had to pull assistants out of their role, working with special needs kids, to change these untrained kids.

This isn't fair on staff.

Potty training can happen as early as when kids start walking.

With all due respect; please do your job as a parent before school starts.

If your child has special needs that's another conversation.

What ends up happening is lots of laundry because we cannot/ do not have the support to keep kids in diapers in schools. So your child will have accidents which then takes away care from special needs kids because teachers cannot help them.

If things get bad your principal might suggest putting your child on half days.

Take a course; do some research; use bribes. Whatever it takes because school is not designed for potty training.

My students were put on a bathroom schedule which interrupted learning for them and others. Sending them to the washroom before and after transitions takes away an adult from their proper job to make sure these kids use the toilet.

School is all about independence, especially in kinder.

I'm sorry if this sounds harsh but it's the honest truth from someone currently living in it.

7

2 weitere Antworten

sunnypv

•

vor 3 Monaten

Read the book called "oh crap". Follow her on socials. On the next long weekend stay home for a couple of days and take his diapers away and under no circumstances put them back on (except sleeping). Naked the first couple of days until you learn his "tell" that he has to go. Sweatpants w no undies after that (cuffed hem will catch leaks). She has a podcast too. We used a little floor potty in the living room at first. Took it out in the patio when playing etc

15

Avatar von u/Spiffiest_Tuna

Spiffiest_Tuna

•

vor 3 Monaten

This method worked great for our oldest! There were many accidents the first week or so but daycare was helpful and once we got past that time everything was great. My second took longer, but the overall same method was still good for us.

For night time, we got a different brand of pull-ups and put them in our kiddo's drawer next to the new undies and called them "night time undies." That's way when we explained that there were no more diapers in the house, they took it seriously.

6

Low_Soil_743

•

vor 3 Monaten

This! Oh Crap is so good. Worked amazing on both my daughter and my son. We did it when they were about 2.5.

2 stuck_behind_a_truck

•

vor 3 Monaten

Montessori schools potty train all toddlers by 3 unless there are developmental delays and the kids all do it without resistance because it has been normalized through routine, so it is possible. It's not a power struggle. They start at 18 months by putting the children on potties at certain routine times (getting to school, before going outside, lunchtime, before nap, after nap, before going home - all logical times to with the child on a toilet).

Parents are encouraged as the kids get to around 2 or so to skip pull-ups and send underwear to school. They also encourage it at home. The purpose is for the child to associate the feeling of needing to go with having gone so that they know the two are related. "I felt this way and I peed and now my underwear is wet with pee. This is what it feels like when I have to pee." The next step is "I don't like wet underwear and stopping my fun to change my clothes. If I use the toilet, I won't have wet underwear or clothes."

Obviously, they are not verbalizing all of this. This is just the synapses that are firing when we allow children to feel what it's like when they need to use the restroom. Pull-ups prevent this feeling and association.

4

ScubaCC

•

vor 3 Monaten

Our school will not allow a child to enter Pre-K unless they are potty trained.

4 sleepygrumpydoc

•

vor 3 Monaten

We don't have JK but we have TK where kids must be 4 on or before 9/1 to go. The schools are not allowed to change diapers or help at all with any toileting thing. So they must wipe and do it all on their own. For TK though if they are not potty trained and in a diaper or has an accident the kid is sent to the nurses office, the nurse then calls the parent who has to take the child home, or at least off campus, to clean the child up. The parents has 30 minutes to get to campus while the child sits in the soiled item. The parent can then return them to school. So if they have 3 accidents that day the parents get called 3 times. If the accident was in the classroom the classroom gets sanitized while the other kids have to either go outside or to another classroom. If a parent chooses to not sent to TK at the school to but to a TK program on a preschool campus then those teachers will help with pottyng still.

6

Avatar von u/bananaphone1549

bananaphone1549

•

vor 3 Monaten

I'm not familiar with JK (I don't think it's a thing where I am) but my twins started preschool at 3 and were not potty trained. We started a few weeks into school and honestly, we just told their teachers what was up. I know the teachers didn't love the uptick in accidents, but we sent lots of spare clothes and now it's all done (thank god).

But they weren't particularly resistant at that point. If your kiddo is really resistant, I recommend finding some outside resources (Jamie Glowacki from Oh Crap Potty Training is amazing) that can help you get over the hump.

4

Avatar von u/ThrowingAbundance

ThrowingAbundance

•

vor 3 Monaten

Please don't send your child to any "pre-Kindergarten" program until they are confidently potty trained.

You will save the child shame and embarrassment!

2

Lovelyone123-

•

vor 3 Monaten

Soo your kid isn\'t 5 or in kindergarten?

2

mariekeap

•

vor 3 Monaten

Based on the use of JK I\'m fairly certain OP is Canadian, probably from Ontario, where kids start kindergarten the year they turn 4, meaning Sept-Dec babies may be 3 at the start of the school year.

2

Lovelyone123-

•

vor 3 Monaten

Oh ok thanks.

2

Avatar von u/Birdingmom

Birdingmom

•

vor 3 Monaten

Both my kids potty trained early but I\'ve had several friends who had resistant kids. If they aren\'t ready, they aren\'t ready. My one friend had a daughter who actually told her "I don\'t want to potty train and you can\'t make me!" And honestly, you can\'t force them. So my friends with resistant kids just backed off and checked in every now and then to see if they were ready.

What mostly did it for all of them was an incentive the kid recognized as something they really wanted. One saw that his friends moved up in daycare rooms because they were and he stayed behind because he wasn\'t. The defiant one above wanted to play ice hockey and couldn\'t because she wasn\'t potty trained. For another it was being a big boy and going to a day camp without his parents that was at the zoo. All of these kids potty trained pretty much in a weekend because they wanted to and were older, and almost no accidents.

The other main issue was that several of my friends\' kids associated potty training with doing things they didn\'t want to or were scared of. So if he doesn\'t want to go to JK, he may be resisting.

So basically I wouldn\'t fight with him over this, have everything available and talk to him gently about why he doesn\'t want to potty train. A good dose of outside incentive is also good, but pushing is never a good idea.

1

ktdances

•

vor 3 Monaten

I cannot agree enough with this comment. It is so frustrating to have the one that is resistant, but you will make it so much worse to force it.

I guess if you have no choice, because of school policy, I would say go hard on bribery. But just know that some of their bodies / brains are just not there yet.

1

NekoBlueHeart

•

vor 3 Monaten

I have a kid with autism who was in diapers until age 4 and a half. Our school district is licensed to change diapers for preschool and Pre-K. It\'s not like that everywhere though.

1

Avatar von u/IcyTip1696

IcyTip1696

•

vor 3 Monaten

Are they starting soon? Or is this started in the fall? If the fall, I would take a break from trying and try again in a couple months.

1 justkate38

•

vor 3 Monaten

If it makes you feel any better my eldest was 4 by the time he was fully DAYTIME potty trained. Literally just in time for school. He was a run and hider lol pooped in the closet a few times.

My 3 year old understands the concept, we\'re tried a few times and he full on resists. He will tell you if his pull up his dirty and be like "I need a wipe" 😊 but when asked to go on the potty or even outside he\'s straight up "I don\'t want to." & that\'s it. The kid is the most stubborn person I know I swear.

But potty trained BY 3 blows my mind. Don\'t fret too much, they\'ll go on the potty when they\'re ready.

1

Individual_Ad_938

•

vor 3 Monaten

It\'s not going to be acceptable to begin school in diapers, unless your child has documented developmental delays.

That being said, you have almost a whole year before he starts (assuming he\'ll start next fall), so I wouldn\'t worry too much about him still not being potty trained at that point. Unless of course you don\'t try at all or just give up, but it sounds like you\'re putting in effort.

1

Avatar von u/Neither-Stomach142

Neither-Stomach142

•

vor 3 Monaten

My 3k/4k will not change diapers. So they\'re either potty trained or they sit in it from 745-1130/245(we can do half or full days). However my 3yo will not poop on the potty. Ever. He wears a diaper to bed at night because he\'s 3. And he\'ll either poop at 11pm or 5am--so annoying. Since potty training has started, he has not pooped in daytime, so I\'m not worried about it.

I believe the public 4k will take them, but they prefer them potty trained. My friend\'s daughter just would not train until she went to 4k and noticed the other kids were. (They have an older autistic son who isn't trained, and she just didn't think she needed to. Lol)

1

Mother-Blood-6005

•

vor 3 Monaten

My oldest who is 7 now wasn't potty trained until 4.5. She was resistant, so she wouldn't have been allowed to enter pre k if I wanted. My middle child was potty trained by 3.5 tho 🙄 all kids are different. My youngest is almost 3.5 and potty training isn't going great (not showing any signs of readiness) so I think I'll give her another 4-6mos to start again.

1

Avatar von u/Sardinesarethebest

Sardinesarethebest

•

vor 3 Monaten

Honestly some kids take longer. As long as you're consistent and don't make it an emotional issue they usually get there around the same time as their peers. This is barring any medical issues etc...

1

Avatar von u/Austynnotjane

Austynnotjane

•

vor 3 Monaten

My daughter struggled to fully understand when her body needed to pee (adhd or sensory issues? IDK) And then like bam, one day she was done. I think this is more common than you think.

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 3 Monaten

I'm in the US in a state without universal public prek. Most private preschools require kids be potty trained before going to the 3 year old room. If a child qualified for prek (4 year old) at a public school (to qualify you have to meet certain low income or low developmental benchmarks, aka the most needy qualify), then I think they'd take the kid without being potty trained. There are different licenses in the US where help with toileting is either allowed or not, so that all plays into things too. All that to say, it might matter if this is an opt in vs universal thing for your area.

1

Proud-Fennel7961

•

vor 3 Monaten

Oh Crap method. All three of my kids were potty trained before 2.5yo. It only takes a few days.

1

Avatar von u/Electrical-Ad8991

Electrical-Ad8991

•

vor 3 Monaten

My now 5 year old (SK kid now) was potty trained 2 months before starting JK (he turned 4 a couple days before school started). Our school they need to be potty trained to go. Otherwise they don't start. Assuming you are in Ontario as we are one of the only places with JK. Legally kids don't need to be in school til grade 1. We were super close to thinking he would have to wait til SK to start school.

Also a neuro spicy kid.

You do have time although I remember the stress of thinking we only have x months left.

With all that said. Accidents at school will happen. But as mentioned in others your kid has to be able to get their wet clothes off and clean clothes on by themselves.

1

Post 5: Potty Training on a deadline

So we've had lots of major life changes all in one go, and 3M is definitely feeling it. His childminder got suspended overnight, so he had an emergency placement at a nursery, and 4 weeks later we moved 30 miles away.

In September he'll be attending the local school nursery, which I think will be best for him and it was also our only option. He's only freshly 3 so he's one of the youngest in the year.

The problem is, they don't allow nappies. We've been potty training since May/June, and we have really great days and really poor ones. With all the major changes, it's understandable.

He's speech delayed and quite an anxious child (at the emergency nursery placement, they heard him speak only after 3 weeks). He can communicate his toilet needs (he doesn't always but that's a choice he's making) but I'm worried that he'll just wet himself for weeks because he won't speak to his new teachers.

He also thrives in a childcare setting and once settled, will copy the other children so I'm not worried about him being there after say 2+ months. I'm extremely worried about the first weeks.

Has anyone experienced this? Are nursery more understanding than the rule suggests? I've had mixed opinions from those around me, and none of them actually have young children so it's useless advice.

I keep having horrific thoughts that they're going to call me up and say it's been a terrible day/week/month and he's not allowed back. This would mean quitting my job most likely, not even to be dramatic but there literally isn't another childcare option within a suitable distance.

4

.

10

Kommentarbereich

pointsofelli

•

vor 6 Monaten

I'd think they will be understanding. My son is starting pre school in September and he's not potty trained. They have said as he's awaiting an autism assessment it's acceptable. My nephew goes to a different school and wasn't potty trained at 3 and a half and they never even mentioned it.

8

CutCreaseGee

Poster*in

•

vor 6 Monaten

When we met his teacher, she immediately asked if we'd like to be put in touch with the SENCO due to the speech delay (there are also other minor delays on milestones) so I'm hoping there will be an extra level of understanding. I of course said yes, as any help is welcome and our last local authority didn't care at all about his speech.

7 rainbow-songbird

•

vor 6 Monaten

Agreed, My daughter is 2.5 and potty trained at home but can get anxious at nursery and has accidents frequently. We've spoken to them about it and they've said keep sending her in pants. Once she finds her voice she's fantastic but it does take her a bit to find her feet.

I would speak to them and explain the situation instead of surprising them but they should be understanding.

3

CutCreaseGee

Poster*in

•

vor 6 Monaten

There's a frustrating extra layer to this, where I'm actually not here for his first day. Dad will drop him off but he himself gets quite anxious and I'm not sure all the right information will be relayed.

I think I might write a letter to send on his first day? An email? I'm concerned that an email might get lost in the chaos of starting after the holidays.

4 shireatlas

•

vor 6 Monaten

Yes 100% reach out to them beforehand - you should be able to find an email address!

2 skin_of_your_teeth

•

vor 6 Monaten

I teach nursery and I would be very surprised if they don't allow pull ups. We stipulate no nappies as we do not have the changing facilities, but pull ups are fine as this can be done standing.

If a child wets themselves, we encourage them to do what they can to clean up and help them where necessary. If a child soils, we will help but will be making a phone call to parents if they require more than just wiping and fresh clothes.

I don't think school's are actually allowed to refuse a child in nappies.

8

CutCreaseGee

Poster*in

•

vor 6 Monaten

This is interesting!

Copied and pasted from their welcome pack: Please ensure your child is fully toilet trained before they start and able to independently manage their clothes when using the toilet. This really helps us spend more time playing, learning and exploring together.

We also aren't allowed to send our own spare clothes, they'll be changed into nursery spares.

I've had an early years teacher tell me that these rules are more flexible than they sound, but they're in place to avoid parents that aren't trying at all and are hoping nursery will potty train for them. I'm trying literally everything and just so scared they'll be able to penalise us for it.

3

skin_of_your_teeth

•

vor 6 Monaten

I agree with what you've been told. They are making it sound like a rule to avoid the parents that don't even try to potty train. The school has every right to ask that your child is potty trained, but they can't actually refuse attendance if they aren't.

9

CutCreaseGee

Poster*in

•

vor 6 Monaten

Massively reassuring, thank you so much.

3 formallyacowfrog

•

vor 6 Monaten

I work in a nursery class and children having accidents are just part of it. Until Christmas we usually change 1 or 2 kids every single day, by like January it gets down to 2 or 3 kids a week. We also have a few kids in nappies.

Please just be honest with the staff, don't lie and say he's better with toileting than he is. It will help a lot if you work with your son on getting dressed and undressed independently too. Staff should support him whatever his ability but they will be grateful if he is more able (most 3 year olds can't dress themselves alone but by 5 the majority can).

1\

\

post 6:\

\

Must be potty trained to start preschool in 3 weeks! help!

My LO (3yr F) is so intelligent it's mindblowing. She's got a broad vocabulary..Great communication skills, And an overall happy bubbly girl. She turns 4 at the end of November. The issue is she's signed up to start preschool in the next 3 weeks and the children must be potty trained to attend. Her school had a potty training poop School however it was only for 2-year-olds so she was in between the age of being able to attend and just starting preschool. I've tried bribery\...gifts\...outings\...taking diapers\...going naked\...undies\...she had one day where we were all amped up and she had her undies on..ran to her potty (she has a potty chair but is scared of the adult toilet so advice on that would also be appreciated!) And peed on her potty just didn't get her undies down...so I still took that as a win...(she also did this a few months ago with poop. Ran to her potty and pooped but had her diaper on...) Anyways ...a short while later she came and said she had to poop and needed a diaper..I tried to push the potty but she started crying and jumping around holding herself refusing....I broke down and put a diaper on...I know I need to be more consistent but it's so hard..I read someone's experience about waking up and "all the diapers were missing" method and I think I'll try that...does anyone have any advice for a time crunch potty training method? She wants to go to school so bad she asks me to go everyday and I keep trying to tell her that she has to be able to go on the potty to be able to go to school and I don't think she's quite understanding that she truly cannot go if she's not out of diapers... I've got 3 weeks! HELP!

(some more useful information I must stay at home mom right now so I'm home with her 24/7 so I have the ability to really take any advice to do anything involving at home intense methods...)

Thank you! I hope we can pull this off 🙌🙌🙌 12

.

27

Kommentarbereich

Ok-Brilliant-1688

•

vor 2 Jahren

As you mentioned, the one thing you're missing is consistency. Toss the diapers and stick with it.

39

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Thanks everyone! Starting tomorrow the diapers are going to disappear and we're gonna stick this out !

8

Avatar von u/AccioCoffeeMug

AccioCoffeeMug

•

vor 2 Jahren

Good luck!

2

Avatar von u/jms5290

jms5290

•

vor 2 Jahren

Highly recommend including affirmations while potty training. Adopt the mindset of being your daughter's coach to help her gain confidence as she learns to use the potty. This was incredibly helpful for my 3 yo son who had a lot of fear about using the potty since it was new and scary to him.

Frequently remind your daughter of these kind of affirmations/truths:

I can do hard things!

I am brave.

I am learning!

It gets easier with practice.

I trust myself and listen to my body when I have to go potty.

I am proud of myself!

I\'m doing it!

The first one about hard things was something we used a lot and we gave specific examples of things he does that are \"hard\" and something that big kids do (e.g. riding his bike, going to his Sunday School class by himself, helping load the laundry, helping mop the floor, cleaning up toys, etc.). We also started using these affirmations for other situations that made my son nervous, like trying a bigger climbing structure or taller slide at the park. I think having him hear these affirmations in both potty and non-potty situations really helped my toddler realize he can do things that are new and a little scary and he will be proud once he does it.

I also agree with other commenters about being committed. Don\'t let diapers be an option anymore. Wait to add underwear into her daily attire until she is using the potty regularly while naked from bottom down.

My son was commando for about 2 weeks before we added underwear for him. He also used one particular little potty for about 3 weeks before he was willing to try using the bigger potties in our home. He\'s about 5 weeks out from potty training and he primarily goes in the big potties in our home and does it fine at the school potties too! Holding out hope that your girl can do this too! Good luck :)

8

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Love affirmations! And this is all great advice from everyone thank you!

2

Avatar von u/Rrrrrrrryuck

Rrrrrrrryuck

•

vor 2 Jahren

These are beautiful affirmations

1

Avatar von u/alicemonster

alicemonster

•

vor 2 Jahren

So I know you said you tried bribes, but how did you go about it? I agree that consistency is key, so that\'s the first step. My son is the same age as your daughter, and we tried the no underwear for 3 days method when he was around 2y9mo, and it failed miserably. He was scared to try the potty at all. So a few months later (3y2mo) we went hard on the bribes, threw out the diapers, and did a ton of prompting. My goal with the bribes was to make him excited to sit on the potty, then excited to successfully use it, and then give him a long term goal to work towards. The system looked like this:

Sitting on the potty = 1 chocolate chip

Peeing in the potty = 2 chocolate chips and 1 star on a chart

Pooping in the potty = a dum dum lollypop and 2 stars on the chart

10 stars earned a special surprise (a new hot wheels car)

Then 25 stars earned another special surprise.

The last star chart was forgotten about long before he would have completed it. We were able to eliminate the reward for just sitting on the potty pretty quickly, and then rolled back the other treats. I think we were able to completely stop all bribes by 3 or 4 weeks, and he was no longer having regular accidents after 3 days.

5

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I had gotten a bunch of little \"presents\" from the dollar store\...where I screwed up is I\'m always getting her \"presents\" so I don\'t think it was that much of an incentive to form a change especially something she wasn\'t wanting to do in ghe first place. So i had to start there and quit with the Amazon packages (🙄 I know i know\...she\'s just my first girl after 4 Boys so I think I had just turned into a giant pushover which I am kicking myself in the ass about now bc I\'ve started to raise an entitled little thing and that\'s as much as a struggle to reverse if not more than the potty training is\...) so I know I\'ve made mistakes along the way that I can contribute to this resistance 🙄

1

Avatar von u/tealbliss

tealbliss

•

vor 2 Jahren

We are in a similar time crunch. Our son is 3 in sept and we are wanting to do preschool with him but he needs to be potty trained. He is totally fine peeing on the potty and will even poop if we catch it before but he simply won\'t tell us when he needs to go.

Our plan is to do a potty focused weekend next weekend (we are gone for a wedding this weekend). Our plan is naked boy and push all the fun fluids (juice, chocolate milk, Kool aid whatever works to make sure we have lots of full bladder tries). We will also get him a watch as his reminder. It\'s been 3 months of us trying so we know he can do it but he just doesn\'t listen to his body. Both husband and I think he has adhd which would be a contributing factor for ignoring body sensations. Worst case we try preschool and hope he doesn\'t have too many accidents. He only needs to be able to hold it for like 2 hrs at school!

4

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Doing this starting tomorrow!

2

waanderlustt

•

vor 2 Jahren

I just wanted to say it took a good 6 months to get my son to regularly go poo in the toilet. He was always refusing before. I think he was scared of the feeling of it coming out. I read to take the underwear off and have him go commando because the underwear feels too close to a diaper to catch it. We did that and it seemed to get him to go much quicker. I also kept the little potty in the same room as us so whenever he got the urge he could just go quickly sit. He still had problems withholding sometimes and our pediatrician OK'd giving a little miralax daily when that happens to help things move along

4

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

jellyfish memory six normal caption flowery library fearless fly grandiose

This post was mass deleted and anonymized with Redact

3

Avatar von u/april203

april203

•

vor 2 Jahren

My 2.5 year old is mostly potty trained after 2 weeks, we still have trouble with poop because she's been constipated so if you have trouble with that I would go ahead and start doing a daily probiotic and apple juice/prune juice whatever works for you. But the thing that really helped us was the Little Advents potty training advent calendar. I showed them to her and let her pick out which one she wanted, she chose my little pony and we got excited about it and started watching the TV show to get to know the characters. She was too excited to wait and wanted to start right away when it came in the mail. We switched to underwear only and had to stay in for a few days and do a million loads of laundry for it to work. Now she only wears training underwear during outings and I bring extra clothes and it really helps keep clean up during accidents to a minimum. It's been a process still and she's only recently stopped fighting me on peeing before outings/nap/bed or anytime that she feels like she doesn't really need to pee but obviously she needs to to avoid accidents. But the motivation of going through the sticker chart/advent calendar is what made her want to do it. It snapped her out of it when she was being stubborn and not wanting to potty because her toys needed their friends that were still stuck in the box, lol.

2

floristinmanhattan

•

vor 2 Jahren

We used screen time as an incentive, nothing else worked. It was like night & day.

2

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I like this!

1 nodisassemble

•

vor 2 Jahren

I caved and bought the Little Big Feelings potty training course and that helped prepped me too be consistent and ready for the potty training process. It took us about 3 days to mostly get trained. Only one accident for the last few weeks.

2

Kooky-Incident2430

•

vor 2 Jahren

I second the Big Little Feelings Course! We still have accidents, but it was amazing for us. He still fights me on sitting on the potty before places, but will tell me when he has to go a lot of the time.

2 bootyprincess666

•

vor 2 Jahren

right now is the perfect time to do it according to the farmers almanac. also, your child's school will potentially have a child sized toilet (not sure if you've seen their toilets or not). be consistent. take her every hour and take away the diapers.

2

Mama-bear1234

•

vor 2 Jahren

I make up cute little songs or read stories to make potty training fun. I found a cute book on Amazon Bendon P-O-T-T-Y Kathy Ireland\... https://www.amazon.com/dp/1505006147?ref=ppx_pop_mob_ap_share our daughter loves it and she will sing it when using the potty. Definitely get rid of the diapers and invest in some potty training underwear that are cotton. I've been potty training our 3 year old all summer and it's only been in the last 3 weeks that it has clicked. Good luck. Stay strong. You got this.

2

1 weitere Antwort

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Update: SHE PEED ON THE POTTY TWICE TODAY!!! (I Bought a big huge pack of tiny containers of slime as \"potty 1 Presents\" and it seems to be good enough incentive for her. .as she LOVES slime but I do NOT 😊 so she doesn't get it all that often\...so 🙌🙌🙌🙌

2

1 weitere Antwort

ChewyTeats

•

vor 2 Jahren

So, this definitely wasn't our best parenting moment, but we had this exact same problem, except my son is 4. We tried everything. He started sneaking outside to poop. The first time, he pooped in our rocky driveway and then used rocks to smear the poop on our cars. He was also peeing all over the place INSIDE OF MY HOUSE. We didn't know what to do bc nothing we tried would work. So, I get home from work one night, and my fiancé had created the "poop monster" who will take kids away from their mama and daddy if they poop outside or pee anywhere besides the toilet. He even showed our son pictures of monsters 🤩 It took about 2-3 days, and now my son's only pooping and peeing in the toilet. It's amazing

2

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Desperate times call for desperate measures 😊 no judgment

2

Avatar von u/Rrrrrrrryuck

Rrrrrrrryuck

•

vor 2 Jahren

My oldest was like this. Smart and capable. I truly believe it was a "will" issue not an ability issue.

for context, her twin sister was potty trained before she turned two. But this one would only do it infrequently and on her own terms. I tried everything.

when September came and I dropped her 3 year old twin sister off but not her, she had a complete meltdown. She was then potty trained completely within a couple of weeks. Once she was trained, she was able to go to, but not every program works like that. (They told me they simply didn't have the staffing to deal with untrained kids. I was able to pay for her spot but not being her until she was potty trained completely).

if you KNOW shes smart enough and wants to go, can you stage a fake first day of school Where you explain that she can't stay because she's not potty trained, but if she proves she can do it this week, you'll let her come next week? She's almost four and smart, she should be able to understand. With twins it worked easily but idk without seeing another child get to go.

1

This_Replacement_849

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I like this idea. She\'s a kinesthetic learner so I\'m going to call her school and see if this is a possibility!

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

I\'ve been trying with my daughter for a year, and nothing works.

Rewards, underpants, sticker charts, advent calendars, it doesn\'t matter. She is 3 1/2 now. My oldest was potty trained before 2 1/2, and it wasn\'t nearly as hard.

It is so frustrating and makes me feel like a failure. And every time I look for advice, it is just suggesting all the same things I\'ve already tried, or someone who took like a month to potty train saying \"just be patient\"

The doctor suggested giving her some extra fiber, which has only made her shits messier to clean up.

1

post 7:

3 y/o must be potty trained in one month or be dismissed from care.

My son just turned three and our daycare is giving us one month to have him and our daycare is giving us one month to have him fully potty trained or they will dismiss him from care (kick him out).

My son tells us when he has to go to the potty when he's trying to avoid something like nap time or bedtime. Outside of that he's pretty inconsistent. He doesn't tell his daycare teachers at all.

We have tried all sorts of methods to get him to consistently go to the potty, and none have worked.

Our only chance, if he isn't potty trained in a month, is that his doctor writes some sort of diagnosis requiring an accommodation for him. What if he has no developmental delays and just isn't interested or ready to potty train?

I'm just looking to see if anybody else has been in this situation and how it worked out.

20

.

25

Kommentarbereich

Avatar von u/Totallynotacylon

Totallynotacylon

•

vor 2 Jahren

Talk to your doctor ASAP and get a note, any daycare that accepts federal funding cannot dismiss a child for not being potty trained, Google Chesterbrook Academy. Not being completely potty trained by three years old is not abnormal. Pressuring you to potty train within a month is unfair to you and your child. I would schedule a meeting with the daycare principal and definitely push back on that timeline.

53

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Luckily we already had a scheduled appointment for Monday. We will definitely be addressing this with his pediatrician.

12

Gypsie_ontheCorner

•

vor 2 Jahren

It\'s so crazy\...I had such a hard time finding care for my son because of his training issues\...then he goes to kindergarten (still not quite there yet) but the school didn\'t bat an eye when I told them. They encouraged me to bring him with a change of clothes but that was it\...I really hate how the day care system is now. Like parents don\'t stress enough about leaving kids with complete strangers already 20 BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Thank you for saying this. I have been so stressed. He stayed home with me until about six months ago. It was a hard transition for the both of us but it has been good for his social skills. I don't want to see him kicked out just because of potty training issues.

5

Hallucigeniaa

•

vor 2 Jahren

My 3 y/o decided all the sudden that he no longer wanted to use the potty and didn't bother pulling his pants down either. Just wet himself all day. I had a long talk with him trying to get to the root of why he didn't want to use the potty. Do the noises scare you? Is it hard to feel coming? Do we not want to stop playing? Nope. None of those. He just felt like it. My solution? Show him the ramifications of wetting our pants. He now cleans the floor (after I have a go at it and he never uses harsh chemicals) and does the laundry with me every time he has an accident. Start to finish.

I remove all anger from the situation (very important so as not to make laundry/cleaning a bad thing) and we actually have fun doing it together (99% of the time). But it really has showed him the work involved in cleaning our own pee messes and worked nearly instantly. He tried a few times after the rule was enacted to test and see if I would stick to it and since I did stick with it he's been absolutely fantastic. Hasn't even peed down the side of the toilet in over a week.

You could try something like this?

14

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

My son loves laundry and cleaning. So much so that I do it while he is not around if I need to do it quickly. I am not sure if he would see that as a deterrent, but I am willing to try.

3

Hallucigeniaa

•

vor 2 Jahren

It might get real old real fast if he has to do it 3x/day or however much he wets himself. My recommendation would be to (as much as you can) drop everything and clean/do laundry the instant it happens. Having fun playing with toys? Sorry bud we have to pause that and take care of our messes before we can go back to playing. Come home from school with a baggy of wet clothes? Ok let's deal with that first before having our snack and playing (or whatever your routine is). It's a natural consequence of making a mess so it teaches real ramifications

7

Neat_Technician_7191

•

vor 2 Jahren

I haven't been in that situation before; well, my son is 3, and he has good days and bad days with potty training, but the school that he goes to hasn't given us an ultimatum like that. They want you to pressure your child into being fully potty trained? Do they have children? It doesn't work like that.

4 runsanditspaidfor

•

vor 2 Jahren

Our daycare tried this same thing and nothing came of it. Our kid is still at the daycare and he is still not pooping in the potty. It's an issue but they have not kicked him out by any means.

3

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Oh wow!

They told us he would need to be potty trained before he could move up to the next class but they didn't mention dismissal until recently.

Reason being that he has aged out of his current class.

Was it like this with your kid?

How long were was your kid at the daycare before they tried to dismiss him

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

Our preschools official policy is that the kid needs to be potty trained to attend. When they invited us over the phone, I was straight up blunt that she is not potty trained. No dancing around it.

They were just like "Oh no problem. We got it." And that was that.

3 runsanditspaidfor

•

vor 2 Jahren

Yes. Basically we were in the exact same situation. He had been at this daycare of a year when they started talking about this

2

Avatar von u/playalindafan

playalindafan

•

vor 2 Jahren

Our daycare does require them to be potty trained to move to a 3's class but they are perfectly ok to hold them back if they need a little extra time. I'm not sure how much time they would ultimately allow though.

Are they not trying to train as well? Our daycare prides themselves on their peer pressure method that starts in the 2's (2-2.5) and through to a transitional 2.5 to 3 class.

They still put pull ups on for naps in the 3's but do not have changing tables in the 3's class where they do in the 2 to 3's.

3

Avatar von u/aboylecousin

aboylecousin

•

vor 2 Jahren

Im shocked at the daycare's demand! all kids progress differently. How can they kick him out for something so developmentally appropriate? I would allow him to learn at his own pace, get the doctor's note as required, and start looking at other daycares in the meantime.

10

ProfessorButtkiss

•

vor 2 Jahren

Idk how it is in other states, but in South Carolina it's required by DHEC (which is our state health dept) that by 3k kids need to be potty trained. This was always weird to me though.

3

Avatar von u/aboylecousin

aboylecousin

•

vor 2 Jahren

oh wow I am in Canada and have never heard of this thanks for sharing.

1 esalman

•

vor 2 Jahren

What kind of daycare is this? A home daycare?

2

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

No it's not a home daycare. I don't know how to say it, but they are a regular daycare.

3

Avatar von u/travelkaycakes

travelkaycakes

•

vor 2 Jahren

If your in the US we usually would refer to a larger day care as \"center based\" vs \"home based\"

4 RecognitionSilver635

•

vor 2 Jahren

Find another daycare. You have one month.

That's crap. Not all kids can be potty trained by a certain point. They wanted my kid potty trained before going into the toddler room at 2 1/2! It was a nightmare. He wasn't even close to ready.

We struggled for the next FULL year and couple of months. We just now (he turns 4 in January) got him mostly potty trained.

They won't do it until they are ready. You can't force your kid to recognize he has to go and then actually go. For my kid it was developmental. He knew what to do. He just wouldn't do it.

Good luck. I'd find a new daycare. We are on daycare 3. It's a good one now.

2 controversial_Jane

•

vor 2 Jahren

Have you asked him? My son was wee trained at 2 but would go and put on a nappy for poo's until almost 3. We had a chat about him starting KG and that they weren't allowed to wear nappies there and poo's had to go in the toilet. We used some incentives but his desire to go to big boy school was a real push.

2

ameowry

•

vor 2 Jahren

Can your son hold his bladder? If so, a timer or a potty watch might be a good fit. Or having a schedule: "we try going at these times". My daughter was able to hold her bladder pretty well so for the first month we had to take her to the bathroom if we wanted her to use the toilet. After a month or two of that she was able to feel when she needed to go.

2

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Update:

So the daycare proposed that we just put him in underwear and see if that helps him potty train. He doesn't seem to care about being wet, so right now it's just a lot of laundry.

He is "trying" on the potty more at daycare but I am not sure if this is because of the underwear or because they are paying more attention to him.

2

Avatar von u/humanloading humanloading

•

vor 2 Jahren

Usually center based daycares have strict licensing requirements and often for 3 year olds and up, the teachers are not licensed to diaper the children at all. They can "assist" maybe by helping pull up and down pants, but they can't change diapers and aren't supposed to wipe etc. So likely this is where this is stemming from. They are holding your son back in a classroom where the teachers are licensed to provide diaper care but typically can only do this for so long.

That said, my son wasn't potty trained at 3 🙄 Our nanny wound up potty training him at 3 years old and a few months tho by having him just wear pants and no diaper or underwear for several days. People say no pants but with boys then pee goes everywhere, the pants help contain it at least. You will need to launder the clothes but honestly it worked super fast with our kiddo. It's more getting them to connect the urge to pee with peeing with then being wet and feeling yucky because they aren't wearing a diaper anymore. Diapers keep them comfy bc they wick away moisture but then they have little incentive to figure out potty training. It took him about two weeks after being pee trained to get poop trained. Poop was a little harder, we wound up using incentives with a monster truck (his fav) we would sit on top of the fridge and remind him if he pooped in the potty he got the monster truck! And then replace with a new monster truck after a successful poop.

3

BunnyKnowsTheRopes

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Update 2: So the daycare extended the time until the first of the year.

At this point, it does not look like he will be potty trained, so he will be dismissed from care.

Since my last post he as been diagnosed with a social disorder and a speech delay. He has also been under the care of an occupational therapist and a speech therapist. His OT says he is just not developmentally ready for potty training.

I have asked his daycare for official paperwork stating his date of dismissal and the reasons for dismissal as well as a copy of the accommodation request with a statement that they can not accommodate his needs. I hope use this paperwork to get him care elsewhere.

1\

\

Post 8: Feeling the potty training pressure!

My son will be 2.5 in May. At his two year wellness check, his pediatrician told us when it comes to potty training "he's in charge" I.e., wait for him to be ready. However seeing all of the posts here and in fb groups about 2 year olds who are already potty trained has me discouraged and concerned!

He's not really showing any interest yet. He likes to sit on his training potty when we use the toilet (or randomly just because he thinks it's fun) but he does so with pants up and it has nothing to do with urge to go. He also isn't at all bothered by poop or pee being in his diaper. We've tried talking to him about using the toilet or asking him if he has to go when we know he's pooping, but it's always a firm NO.

When he turns three he'll have to be potty trained in order to move up to the preschool class at daycare. I guess it's kind of a ways away, but I'm still worried he won't be ready.

Should we try to gently give training a shot??

25

•

42

Kommentarbereich
somekidssnackbitch

•

vor 2 Jahren

If he needs to be potty trained at 3 I'd start now/soon--no need to get rid of diapers tomorrow but I'd give yourself 3-6 months. I think kid-driven potty training is hit or miss--many kids do become more interested sometime between 2-4, but many don't. Kids are generally reluctant to change a routine that is working for them.

46

MaximumGooser

•

vor 2 Jahren

Ours is closing in on 3.5 yo and REFUSES to potty train 😭😭😭 10

somekidssnackbitch

•

vor 2 Jahren

It's not just you!!! I know a fair number of people whose kids just did not want. And if it's not potty training it's something else...

6 pennypoobear

•

vor 2 Jahren

I got a potty training watch from Amazon. Game changer. Consistent wees and first independent poop today! Get it.

5 thekaylenator

•

vor 2 Jahren

This is excellent and now on my wishlist. What a time to be alive. Thank you!

2

MaximumGooser

•

vor 2 Jahren

Ahhhhhh what ok looking into it thank you, if she doesn't potty train by September she has to be held back from starting PP and we also ended her daycare for end of august so we are like girl 🙄🙄🙄

1

pennypoobear

•

vor 2 Jahren

Switched to padded underwear and the watch. Said \"we're gonna listen for the watch and try to go potty even if nothing comes.\" Lots of hype and high 5s when they started really going. For the anxious pooper, i got a prize and put it where it could be seen, but not reached. And said that it was \"trapped in Ka-ka land\" and they had to \"unlock the door with a poo in the potty to save it\" lol. Worked in a few days.

8

Setze diesen Thread fort

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

It's so nice to hear the other side! It usually feels like every toddler talked about in this sub has been potty trained since they turned two lol

2

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Thanks so much!

5

Avatar von u/a_peninsula

a_peninsula

•

vor 2 Jahren

will the daycare help when the time comes? at 2.5 our daughter had like almost no interest in using the toilet until she found out one of her little daycare buddies was wearing underwear. I swear to god she gave me this look like \"her??\" and the next morning she put on underwear and told me she was going to pee on the toilet every day, and she did. peer motivation is real. the presence of a kid-size bathroom and regular toilet breaks really helps. ask them if you haven't already!

22

jushappy

•

vor 2 Jahren

My dude was very socially motivated as well. On our own potty training was moving so slow, hours in the bathroom. As soon as school started, he got it together a bit here and there. Once his bestie started going, my dude was fully trained. I'm told they have a little bathroom club where they go together between activities.

I highly recommend keeping a collapsible travel potty for outings. Mine has earned its keep many times over.

6

ProductiveFidgeter24

•

vor 2 Jahren

Bathroom club! I'm borrowing this. So cute.

1

ColoredSpiritFingers

•

vor 2 Jahren

If the daycare will help, that is huge! My LO just turned 2 in February, and we introduced the potty because she showed all the signs of being ready, but she wasn't really interested. Next thing we know, she's using the potty at daycare because her friends are and she follows them to the bathroom. This has been going on for about a month. No interest at home but every day at school. 🙌

3

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I've been meaning to ask them! They definitely support parent efforts. I know there are at least two kids in his room that are training, and that doesn't seem to matter to him right now 😊

1

Avatar von u/Financial_Temporary5

Financial_Temporary5

•

vor 2 Jahren

We started before 2 because we were tired of chasing her down to do standing, wiggling diaper changes. She wasn't showing all the signs and it wasn't the easiest thing we have ever done but OhCrap worked and we have no regrets.

7

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

This was us too, I was tired of getting kicked in the face or running after them to do diaper changes. I decided if they didn't want to wear a diaper they can learn to use the potty. The oh crap method worked for us too, but definitely took longer. By 2.5 years they were day and night trained, night training just happened on its own.

1

Avatar von u/IndigoSunsets

IndigoSunsets

•

vor 2 Jahren

I would start to push only because of daycare. We delayed a little because of 3 long planned road trips and were sad about my girl not being moved up right when she turned 3. Turns out we caught COVID on the last trip and used that time home to potty train. She was just a couple weeks after her 3rd bday and it went very smoothly.

vor 2 Jahren

I would start moving in that direction and give it a shot. We potty trained just after my first turned 2 and now that she's 3, I understand why the literature said to not wait until 3. She's so incredibly stubborn as a threenager in a way that she wasn't at 2.

5

AccordingBar8788

•

vor 2 Jahren

I would get a potty training chart and try to start! You still have the advantage that he hits there sometimes, so use it!

4

Avatar von u/Glass_Comedian_7855

Glass_Comedian_7855

•

vor 2 Jahren

My daughter was the same way. she turned 3 in jan and she\'s now potty trained. It\'s like she woke up and decided she didn\'t want to pee/poo in her diaper anymore. Happened within 2-3 weeks. Now she\'s wearing underwear. She just wasn\'t interested/ ready no matter how hard we tried. Her daycare worked with her as well. It\'s ok! He\'ll be ready in due time

4

Avatar von u/Kezhen

Kezhen

•

vor 2 Jahren

I'm in almost the exact same situation when it comes to my daughter. I began panicking about potty training last fall since we were expecting a new baby and would have liked to have her out of diapers - we tried the Oh Crap method at almost 2.5 and it was a failure that turned into a power struggle. We have a new baby born last month so we've decided to wait and try again in 3 months using a less intense, more gentle method. She'll be almost 3 by then. The preschool we're looking at doesn't require that children are potty trained but I hope to have her well on her way by 3.

Good luck!

3

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I just had a baby two weeks ago, and I thought about trying to do it before, but he just seemed so far from ready and time got away. Now I dread going through it with a newborn on our hands, but I think it may be time to try. There are so many methods, I really need to start researching!

2

Jeniho

•

vor 2 Jahren

I'm literally in the same boat. My son is 3.5 years old and my daughter is 8 weeks. I'm trying to take this time on maternity leave to get him potty trained so he can go to school this coming year. He won't even go near the potty. He's absolutely scared of it.

3

Tamryn

•

vor 2 Jahren

I felt pressure after 2.5 as well. I was pregnant then had a newborn so I wanted to wait. We picked a long weekend like 2 months before her third birthday and did the 3-day method. It was honestly pretty easy. Having her be pants-less for a couple days made everything click and she's had like 3 accidents total and only during those first few days. It took longer than 3 days to get everything 100% solidified, but a few weeks later and I'd call her fully trained. She didn't really show a ton of interest beforehand, but we knew she was plenty smart enough to understand, and she knows other kids that are potty trained.

3

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I've heard about the three day method, great to know it worked for you! We have a newborn right now so that route seems so daunting. But then again, maybe it would be overwith faster! Thanks for sharing :)

1 Rguttersohn

•

vor 2 Jahren

Your son sounds like ours. Was showing no signs at 2.5. Didn't mind a dirty diaper, etc. We also needed him potty trained just before turning 3 for his summer camp. But I thought for sure he wasn't ready based on the above criteria.

During spring break in March, we took off his diaper for the last time and had him wear training underwear or nothing around the house. The first 5 days were such a roller coaster we were having 3 to 4 accidents a day, but he kept trying and knew when he made an accident. Around 10 days in he was fully potty trained, and my wife and were/are so surprised.

3

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

This is very encouraging, thank you!

1

Jaded_Promotion8806

•

vor 2 Jahren

If you're under the clock not the worst idea to start trying.

My daughter wasn't showing traditional signs of readiness either we just had a trip coming up in a few months. We thought she was otherwise smart enough to understand the assignment and didn't want to put it off. Had her share of accidents but it wasn't traumatic at all and she eventually caught on just fine.

2

burbankbagel

•

vor 2 Jahren

Generally the longer you wait the easier to train. We ended up not doing it till 3 years, 4 months. For a variety of reasons, trips, another baby in the house. Then when we spent the focused weekend on it was 48 hours and done, maybe 3 or 4 accidents since then.

2

Avatar von u/ynatmakeaname

ynatmakeaname

•

vor 2 Jahren

I just potty trained my 2.5 year old and took less than a week but a lot of effort in the first few days. We used the oh crap method. He didn't really show signs of being ready but he clearly was! The book advises against waiting for them to seem ready.

2 i_want_lime_skittles

•

vor 2 Jahren

My son turned 3 in February and wasn't ready till the week after his birthday, and fortunately it then suddenly clicked. We are almost 2 months in and dare say fully potty trained.

2

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

That's wonderful!

2

Avatar von u/MoreTreatsLessTricks

MoreTreatsLessTricks

•

vor 2 Jahren

My son was 2 years 9 months when we did it. We did the 3 day no-underwear method and it worked for pee. Poop took longer - 3 year 4 months

My daughter was way faster but she was also way more motivated.

My daughter refused to use the potty. She would only use the toilet (they have the small toilets at daycare) and so we got a toilet seat with a built in potty seat from Amazon. It was a game changer.

2

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

It's really tough to decide between a seat for the toilet or a training potty because kids have different preferences! We just have a little potty next to the toilet right now, but maybe I'll try a seat as well

2

Avatar von u/MoreTreatsLessTricks

MoreTreatsLessTricks

•

vor 2 Jahren

Oh, it's so hard! We went through 4 different potties for my son. I let him pick each one, decorate with stickers etc and he still refused to use them for a long time. Good luck!

2 krajile

•

vor 2 Jahren

We potty trained at age 3 and a few months. He just wasn't ready prior to that. Once we started he caught on in no time. It was the easiest transition!

2

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

I'm hoping for it to click like that! We'll probably try here soon, but if it's not working will take a break and try again in another month. Thanks for sharing your experience!

2

tiredafmama2

•

vor 2 Jahren

I hate when people say your child isn't ready unless they act ready. Our day care told us this but I think it's BS. They have to learn what it feels like to have a full bladder and when to make it to the toilet. When you first take off their diaper they're peeing all the time all over the place. It's like their bladder never gets full. They have to learn how to hold it. I think most kids are ready by 2.5 to learn. And it may take awhile until they're not having regular accidents.

1

Winter-Bid-6023

•

vor 2 Jahren

I held my breath and did it at 2.5 and he is just magically trained. He was very ready. You might want to hold off and wait for all the signs of readiness. Our main one was wanting to be changed out of a pee diaper ASAP. And him telling us he was peeing in the diaper. It's probably the easiest parenting thing I've done to date.

1

Ok_Brain_194

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

That's incredible! So lucky. I'd love for it to happen like that for us\

\

Post 9:\

\

What are your best potty training tips?

Our very stubborn child is refusing to potty train. We've tried diaper off, we've tried bribery, we've tried watching hours of potty videos and then singing in front of said potty, and we've tried blowing bubbles which we were told would mimic the peeing muscles.

He starts school in a month and has to be potty trained for it. He's currently building a wall of toys to protect himself while he poos in the corner. He's over 3 so it's not an age thing. But we do know there's a bit of a mental block (when we tried potty training before he held his poo in for 5 days and ended up requiring medical treatment and Miralax for months after).

Does anyone have any recommendations? We're going crazy over here.

Update: It's wild seeing this post and remembering how life consuming this was at the time. Not sure if this helps anyone but I ended up throwing all advice out the window and listening to what he wanted to get things to work for him! He was afraid of going (and for a while even sitting) so we made sitting on the potty the most fun place in the world (bubbles, chocolate, toys!), went every 30 minutes, and super celebrated if any pee came out. I put him in normal clothes and gave him a diaper just to go in if he requested it. He got really used to "go to the potty, get a tiny toy" and it made the process kind of fun for him. We randomly had a 48 hour period where he willingly sat without a diaper request (but screamed the whole time he peed). And after that he was good to go!

92

.

122

Kommentarbereich

t-loin

•

vor 2 Jahren

We used a lot of language from Dr Becky's free potty training guide. We talked about the feelings we had when we needed to pee and we went to the bathroom and invited her with us and casually asked her if she wanted to use her potty at the same time we peed. Over prompting her did not work well

52

Avatar von u/sonarboku

sonarboku

•

vor 2 Jahren

Oooh - thanks for the tip !

Looks like you mean this program

14

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

We followed Brandi Brucks potty training in 3 days method. A jar of M&Ms to motivate a very stubborn toddler. For every pee in the potty - 1 M&M, poop - 2 M&Ms. We even let toddler pick out colors of the candy reward to make it more entertaining, and to motivate. Brandi suggests leaving the M&Ms in the bathroom so that the toddler knows that there is going to be a reward. One week in and toddler has already stopped asking for the candy after going to the potty. Big milestones such as no accidents were rewarded with a small toy under $5.

Not the healthiest method but worked for us.

59

Cleeganzo

•

vor 2 Jahren

I didn't know it was a written down method, but we did the same thing. We had a box of 'toilet lollies' one for pee, two for poo. We then went nappy free over a four day weekend, about 6 weeks ago. After the first few wee accidents that she had to help us clean up, she was more excited to go to the toilet rather than stopping playing. Poop took another month, she had a big mental block and was also a bit lazy. In the end of all things it was emotional blackmail that got her. Probably not the healthiest mechanism, but she is a bit of a people pleaser and knowing that her pooping her pants makes mum and dad sad seemed to finally make it click more than any other method. We are about two weeks on from that day with only one poop accident. She will be four in August.

8

gabblah

•

vor 2 Jahren

Love it, I'm totally copying this

2

Cultural_Sink8936

•

vor 2 Jahren

We used fruit loops as 'potty treats'. 1 for trying, 2 for a pee, 3 for a poop. After a week they both naturally stopped asking for the treats and were just trained. We had a bowl of fruit loops to celebrate the accomplishment.

85

Avatar von u/Alternative_iggy

Alternative_iggy

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

How do you get the initial pee to come?

17

hammoe

•

vor 2 Jahren

No bottoms and watch him like a hawk. Whip the potty under him when he starts to go and praise the crap out of any amount that makes it in!

Edit: give a TONNE of fluids. No limit chocolate milk and Popsicles worked for mine

78 naturalbornoptimist

•

vor 2 Jahren

We made our potty reward a cup of lemonade, and that encouraged future peeing and successes!

29

RenegadeTramP

•

vor 2 Jahren

Which potty did you use?

3 hammoe

•

vor 2 Jahren

Every kind I could get my hands on. I have 4 currently - living room, his bedroom, outside and car. All of them were free off my neighbourhood \"buy nothing\"

6

Setze diesen Thread fort

heyitsmelxd

•

vor 2 Jahren

I plied mine with as much water, juice, milk as he could drink those first couple of days. He was peeing every 30min-1hr and got to understand the sensation of a full bladder. I had to watch him nonstop like a hawk and had the potty out in the middle of our living room. At first I would ask him if he needed to pee, but I realized quickly that he'd tell me no regardless of whether he did or not because he didn't want to sit on the potty. So I stopped asking and would just tell him that we were going to sit on the potty. If he peed we'd celebrate like we won the lottery. If he didn't pee I'd set a 15min timer and we'd try again.

I also started at 2yo so he definitely wasn't as stubborn as he is now at 2.5yo.

37

Avatar von u/vutama1109

vutama1109

•

vor 2 Jahren

Haha that\'s what I\'m trying to figure out as well. My daughter would hold and say need to pee also sit on the potty. But she\'s afraid to let it go.

5

Avatar von u/deviatncat

deviatncat

•

vor 2 Jahren

We had bucket of water to put feet in to help release :D it had 50:50 success. Once she just did it by herself and it went great from that point. Just let her sit and keep trying without pressure

6

Setze diesen Thread fort

Avatar von u/vutamall109 vutamall109

•

vor 2 Jahren

Haha that\'s what I\'m trying to figure out as well. My daughter would hold and say need to pee also sit on the potty. But she\'s afraid to let it go.

1 cheribella

•

vor 2 Jahren

Ha, we did this exact thing but with Hershey's Kisses. I was worried we'd be giving my son chocolate forever but he did eventually stop asking. I think the 1 reward for just trying was really key.

1

Jaded_Promotion8806

•

vor 2 Jahren

We put the potty in the closet, set up a light and gave her a pile of books to read. Just asked if she wanted to do some "quiet reading time on the potty", closed the door and it was always a guaranteed pee or poop for us within minutes.

27

hammoe

•

vor 2 Jahren

Ooo that\'s smart!

2

GirlintheYellowOlds

•

vor 2 Jahren

Books and bribery. She picked out underwear and threw out all the diapers. We only have pull ups for night time. Pee got you a high value treat. Poop got you several. And every book/TV show we read/watched for the first 3 weeks was all potty training all the time. She got tired of peeing and pooping herself eventually and got with the program. But we couldn't put any stress on it. Everything had to be really matter of fact, no celebration and no force. I threw out and cleaned up so much underwear, clothing, and surfaces in my house.

21

emilianna555

•

vor 2 Jahren

This is helpful. Thanks.

4

TamtasticVoyage

•

vor 2 Jahren

Does he have any friends that are potty trained? If he sees a buddy doing it, he may feel inclined to try.

We did candy, but that wasn't super working. So we did celebratory dance parties but she still wanted a candy. Did both. Whatever. Still wasn't enough. Finally I started howling. Like every time she peed or pooped I would howl and she would howl and dad would howl when he heard us howling. We still howl sometimes. It's fun and effective. She kept asking for candy maybe every three to four pees. Finally I told her, "you know your body now. We don't need candy every time. But I'll still get you a snacky for a poop" because that's only once a day and it's not a battle worth having.

22

AspirationionsApathy

•

vor 2 Jahren

I think my son would really enjoy howling!

7

MxRiley

•

vor 2 Jahren

When my son was a small baby he used to be soothed by recordings of howling wolves. I'll try and remember this for when he's ready to potty train!

3

Natural-Hour1467

•

vor 2 Jahren

Seeing another kid go potty is exactly what my extremely stubborn 3 year old needed to finally start going on the potty! Her 2 year old sister started doing really well with asking to go potty and ever since then my oldest has been perfect.

2

Avatar von u/Buffy_summers21

Buffy_summers21

•

vor 2 Jahren

I do think no pull ups and just regular underwear during the day was helpful, even though it was frustrating to always be cleaning underwear. He loved this book called \"We Poop on the Potty\" about how different animals poop.

Side note it's ridiculous when daycares expect them to be trained by 3 on the dot.

16

cecilia036

•

vor 2 Jahren

Man I feel you. My almost 5 year old is finally potty trained. It was a really long road. It took us a good year and a half to get him to pee on the toilet and it wasn't until recently that he is now doing both. We just had to be more stubborn than him. We worked really hard to not get mad and to not make a big deal of both successes or failures. We took all diapers away, and when we did poo training that included overnight. We were exhausted doing laundry all the time but it did work. We also took away a lot of fun things. Unless he went on the toilet he couldn't go to the park. If he went and then had an accident at the park we had to leave. If he went on the floor we cleaned it up.

But the key was our behaviour and actions. We worked with an OT and quickly learned, while we weren't doing anything wrong per se, it was as much our actions as him holding us back.

The key was to be consistent and ensure our wording never came across as a choice. "It's time to go potty" as opposed to "do you need to go potty?" Further "let's go potty, ok" to a toddler comes across as a choice rather than a direction.

As I've mentioned before another key thing was to not over react either positively or negatively. Going to the bathroom is just a normal thing everyone does. So when he had an accident our go to was "it's ok we'll try to do better next time" and when he was successful it was a simple "wow that's great, now let's wash our hands". We were told by making a big deal out of successes it puts pressure on them to be successful every time, which we know they won't be. It's just setting them up for feeling like they let you down, which makes it harder.

Given all of that. This is what worked for us. You may have a different dynamic with your kid. And if there is a paediatric OT near you and you financially can, I'd give it a try.

11

VogueSense

•

vor 2 Jahren

I second an OT specialist. We see a pelvic floor OT that works with kiddos for potty training. We talk about poop a lot because it can affect so much when it comes to potty training. I learned a kid can poop every day and still be constipated, which can make it difficult to learn the pee feeling. Also, constipation is a medical diagnosis and schools cannot deny a child for it. At least that is how it is in my state. If anyone has a 3-4+ year old, who is having issues with potty training, talk to your pediatrician about an OT specialist. If you have an older kid who is having issues, see an OT specialist.

3

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

I put the potty in the living room and left the kid bare assed til she got it down. Seeing the toilet all the time is a nice little visual reminder that that's where you're supposed to go.

22

Avatar von u/Alternative_iggy

Alternative_iggy

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

The toilet was in the living room today. We got very mad that the pants were off and barricaded ourselves in a corner with pillows and toys to poo...

14

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

My 2.5 year old refuses to pee or poop in the potty but DOES frequently request to poop in the backyard like the pugs.

ETA: just to clarify, we don't let her do it

50

IrradiatedBeagle

•

vor 2 Jahren

You\'re no fun

45

Avatar von u/brew-ski

brew-ski

•

vor 2 Jahren

Could you bring a little potty out to the yard, so she could poop in the yard while also getting used to the potty?

17

Avatar von u/Local_m0m

Local_m0m

•

vor 2 Jahren

My first two I used to playfully threaten, "Well, if you can't pee in the potty I'll make you pee in the grass." They would crack up- "no mom! We don't want to pee outside!" Third kid I am begging, "please stop peeing outside on all the trees and do one pee on the potty!"

4

Straight_Sample475

•

vor 2 Jahren

Our pugs try to follow us into the bathroom every time so I convinced our LO that they were trying to learn about the potty, and very impressed by LO using it. Just in case your pugs are also bathroom lurkers lol

1

Avatar von u/Flamingoflower3345

Flamingoflower3345

•

vor 1 Jahr

How many days did it take? We're doing this and we're on day 3 now I'm desperately looking into ways to help more.

1

Blushresp7

•

vor 9 Monaten

how did it go?

1

Avatar von u/Flamingoflower3345

Flamingoflower3345

•

vor 9 Monaten

Oh went great probably a week of it we followed what it says in the book oh crap it's potty time. Which is basically the same thing she was out of diapers in a week had zero accidents after like a month. We had to bribe her too though and m and m every time she used the potty. Shes out of them at night too now but i still have to wake up once in the middle of the night for her to go to the bathroom or she'll wet the bed did it at 2 and 2 months could have done it earlier though we added a step up potty to the toilet too really quick.

1

Blushresp7

•

vor 9 Monaten

how and when did you transition to the adult/big toilet? did poop training come slower? and was night training done by her or by you?

1

Setze diesen Thread fort

Avatar von u/Flamingoflower3345

Flamingoflower3345

•

vor 9 Monaten

If she was peeing herself a lot after we got her to the pants stage we would set a timer on every 1 and half hour and put her on the potty.

1

WassupSassySquatch

•

vor 2 Jahren

What worked for my family was this:

We purchased one of those potty seats you can put on top of the toilet and a stool, so our kids were using the "grown up potty".

We would take the kid out to pick out their own underwear (and we'd buy a few extra absorbent underpants as well).

We swapped out diapers for pull ups during sleep times and outings.

Then we spent about a week at home. I'd sit the kid on the potty every hour for 15 minutes. We read our special potty book (Dino Potty by Sara Conway) until they went.

There were accidents, but soon the potty became familiar, nicer than wearing wet underwear, and exciting because of the book. We also really hyped up successful potty visits. It has worked for all three of my kids in less than two weeks.

9

Avatar von u/Local_m0m

Local_m0m

•

vor 2 Jahren

I did see an Instagram recently of a mom of a very stubborn daughter who said she just pretended her daughter was potty trained so that she didn't have anything to rebel against. Just straight up gaslit her into it by saying, "oh, I forgot you are already potty trained." Or "that's right, we don't have to wear diapers because you already trained for the potty!" Stuff like that. And she said her kid stopped fighting her and just rolled with it. Idk man, kids are wild.

9 miniroarasaur

•

vor 2 Jahren

I don't have any tips. My advice? Just stop trying.

I'm in the same boat. My daughter patently refuses. It's at the point where now I'm waiting to sign her up for school because everywhere that doesn't require potty training is full and waitlisted. It sucks. I have to push back my own plans to finish my degree and I REALLY mentally need her to go socialize with peers and have rules from a non-parent. I've been at home with her since birth and I'm more than ready to get her the fuck out of my house for a few hours a day without me.

It just fucking sucks. But I can't force it, and the more I do the more she fights back. She's certainly her father's daughter and so both of them are teaching me to be patient.

I hope the toy barricade does not become covered in poo. Good luck.

41

fluffstar

•

vor 2 Jahren

Just here for the solidarity. Mine is the exact same. Four next week, still just doesn't care. All her friends in pants, "but I wear nappies". Stopping trying to force it has been the absolute hardest thing. The GP said she'll do it when she chooses to. But GAARGH if you'd told me beforehand I'd be changing nappies for FOUR YEARS I'd have lost my mind.

9

Avatar von u/purplefrog867

purplefrog867

•

vor 2 Jahren

Came here for this comment! I have a stubborn 3.5 year old we tried all the usual bribery etc. she would actively turn down the sweets rather than wee. I get so frustrated with the "just take their nappy off and stay home for 3 days" rhetoric. It doesn't work for all kids! We knew she could do it as her nappy was dry for hours, she just didn't want to. Took off all the pressure and just started saying "you let me know when you're ready". One day we found out she had been doing wees on the toilet at nursery so we just went with it. Still asks for a nappy to poo but we're not rushing her, just always ask if she wants to do it on the toilet today. Of course we are fortunate that the nursery was happy for her to go at her own pace. It is frustrating when you have a deadline!

4 sassyponypants

•

vor 2 Jahren

Mine was the exact same. Stubborn AF. My husband insisted she should be trained already and refused to believe this was totally normal despite me repeatedly telling him so -- it was incredibly frustrating for all of us. Then one day, the week before she turned 3, we randomly let her pick a pair of Peppa undies from her drawer and that was it! It was like we flipped a switch.

3

Avatar von u/SeesawAppropriate953

SeesawAppropriate953

•

vor 2 Jahren

I'm in the same boat with my son and starting to panic cause he has to be fully potty trained by September!

1

Avatar von u/KaraC316

KaraC316

•

vor 2 Jahren

Turning on the faucet sometimes gets my Lo to pee.

Also, she loves the potty seat on the big potty and has never gone on her potty chair type.

She loves anything that's mine, so I ask if she wants to go on my potty.

8

Avatar von u/Alternative_iggy

Alternative_iggy

Poster*in

•

vor 2 Jahren

Yeah we've tried turning on the faucet! But so far no dice.

2

Luvfallandpsl

•

vor 2 Jahren

Don't leave dog food bowls out. Some kids like to poop in them. Ask me how I know.

8

UPnorthCamping

•

vor 2 Jahren

My 2nd backtracked. I put her in underwear in her diaper so she felt the yucky but I didn't have to clean a huge mess. After a couple days of that we were good.

10

not2daysatan22

•

vor 2 Jahren

This is gold. I'm so nervous to let her run around with my fully carpeted house bare bottomed. It never occurred to me to try this. Going to try!! Thank you!

4

Alsoomse

•

vor 8 Monaten

This is the way.

1

Avatar von u/South_Map_8668

South_Map_8668

•

vor 2 Jahren

No pants at home, potty in the main room, timed potty sits. And then treats for success. I started mine at 22 months, she was fully trained (minus sleeping/bedtime) at 26 months. You slowly introduce pants and THEN underwear after they are peeing naked consistently. And then I only stopped using diaper when out of the house once she started staying dry and asking to go potty when out of the house

5

Smokin_Weeds

•

vor 2 Jahren

My son is 22 months and he hasn't had a poop diaper in a week and we do pee in the potty sometimes when we're home (it's my fault - I'm not consistent with pee) but how did you conquered out of the house? We go to the park for extended periods of time and idk what to do. Take the potty with us (I don't think he can hold it long enough to find a bathroom) or some people have said don't leave the house until he's fully potty trained??? Sorry for the tangent lol but what did you do?

1

lolal06

•

vor 2 Jahren

If you can give it a few days where you are at home and super focused, I think that's helpful at the beginning. If you drive to the park, it might be nice to keep a portable potty in the car. Or go to parks that have public bathrooms and bring (if necessary) a foldable toilet seat. And get comfortable with accidents - the extra absorbent underwear do a decent job of containing the mess, in my experience.

My 23 month old is in the middle of potty training. We started with a week where we did very few out of the house activities and I kept him pants-less at home. By the end of that week, we were in a good routine of him peeing on the potty when I prompted him, every hour or two. As long as he was pants-less, he also started going to the potty on his own, without me noticing.

But then we had to go back to real life. He would not ask to go, so if he was in someone else's care (ie daycare, family visits, gym daycare), I would put him in a pull up. I resigned myself to potty training taking longer because we weren't practicing it consistently.

It's been about a month since we first started. He's good about staying dry with me, so we go out and about in underwear and bring extra clothes in case of accidents. He's just started asking to go, so even though it's slow going, he's still making progress.

3

Twiddly_twat

•

vor 2 Jahren

I definitely brought the potty with me everywhere at this phase. When we'd walk to the park, I'd even put the potty in the stroller basket and set it up behind some bushes when she needed to go. I'd dump pee in the bushes. She never pooped at the park, but there were some buildings close enough that I could have dumped it in there. Dog poop bags are another option.

1

Avatar von u/Flamingoflower3345

Flamingoflower3345

•

vor 1 Jahr

How long after them being mostly naked we're you able to introduce pants again?

1

Forsaken-Fig-3358

•

vor 2 Jahren

We bribed with m&Ms but also let him sit and watch YouTube while waiting to pee. Gave him lots of watermelon, freezer pops, juice - stuff so he will be peeing a lot. Ask if he wants to sit on the potty and watch YouTube which isn't something he usually gets to do. First few days it seemed to surprise him when pee would come out, but it worked because spending so much time on the potty meant it was bound to happen there and we had some successes. He was proud to have some success. We also had him in just pants and no diaper so his pants get wet and uncomfortable when they are wet. When accidents happen just say uh.oh, your pants are wet. It doesn't feel good does it? Don't make a big deal. It took probably 12 days but we haven't had an accident in a few days...now he pees immediately when he sits on the toilet and asks to go. For us constantly prompting didn't work - just made him resistant but your mileage may vary. We are still working on pooping - sitting to poop is hard!

4

RetroSchat

•

vor 2 Jahren

My daughter was less keen about potty training as well (her twin brother it took a weekend...) we tried the songs, the "elmo goes to the potty!" books, cajoling and ended up in the bribery section with heaps of verbal celebration. One gummy for pee, two gummy for a poop. We had alexa routines initially set up for both on a timer to go pee and changed the wording to just have her name- we also would give her twin brother a gummy if she successfully peed so he was her biggest cheerleader. Around 3 years and two months or so it clicked for her (for context twin was just before their 3rd birthday) we also had like 4 potty's set up all around the house- one that even made a flush sound. Constantly has her sit on the potty to try when the timer went off or say after eating etc. I think for some kids it's honestly just when they are ready and or something clicks in their brain.

eta: we also let them pick out character undies which they were super excited about. still are in fact lol- they love picking out "bluey" underwear or "baby yoda"

4

ParticularlyOrdinary

•

vor 2 Jahren

I have zero advice. My almost 3yo has a massive freak out if we see him pooping and try to get him to go on the potty. Out of the combined HOURS he's sat on the potty while my husband reads countless books we've had zero pees or poops in the potty. I'm also losing my mind so I guess what I can offer is commiseration.

4

WorthTheWait87

•

vor 2 Jahren

These helped my son: Cheerios in the toilet to aim his stream at and facing the toilet/straddling it. Not sure if he felt less scared that way or safer but it helped. He also prefers to pee standing up so we went with that! The more pressure we all felt the harder it was, it is a huge life change for them but he will get there

3 monsieur-escargot

•

vor 2 Jahren

I would let it go for a while and see if the lack of attention/mentioning helps your child be open to using the toilet. You mentioned that his school requires him to be toilet trained, would they allow you to delay his start date?

When it is possible, a consistent toileting routine is ideal, particularly at transitions throughout a day. Ex: before getting in the car, arrival at school, before snack, lunch, outdoor time, in for nap, after waking up, etc. You could ask the school for your child's class' routine so you can practice this at home. I always ask children to try their best and if nothing comes out it's okay.

3

kymreadsreddit

•

vor 2 Jahren

Sticker chart finally did the trick for mine. He LOVES stickers - so getting them for any reason was awesome!

3 annonymous1122

•

vor 2 Jahren

I told him we were out of diapers!

My three-year-old was extremely stubborn and had no interest in potty training so I didn't force it or pressure him for a long time.

But after finding out, I was pregnant with my third, and still changing diapers with my 1yo, I was over changing diapers on my wild three-year-old. As his pack of diapers was slowly diminishing, I just showed him that we were running out. Then I use the last diaper when I put him to bed, and the next morning when he woke up, I took the diaper off him and showed him that there was no more diapers. I showed him the potty in the bathroom, he was very angry about it. I was nervous how the day was going to go. After a bit of pushback, he eventually just went pee on the potty and we celebrated and he was pumped about it. Ever since then he took it no problem and he potty trained extremely quickly. It's been three months and I don't even pull ups for outings or at night.

3

Different-Option-555

•

vor 1 Jahr

Oh, wow. What about naps, and at night? No issues there?

1

annonymous1122

•

vor 1 Jahr

He didn't nap anymore, I did pull ups at night but they were dry every morning and he started waking up if he had to pee so we only did that for about a month

1 jpmama_

•

vor 2 Jahren

We did stickers and rewards. I placed a goal sticker chart on the wall in front of the potty and LO gets to put 1 sticker every time they go. At the end of the day, they get a reward. It also helped that the stickers were their favorite characters, extra excitement and motivation.

2

IrradiatedBeagle

•

vor 2 Jahren

Mine hated potty chair and the potty seat. I finally just gave up, let him run bare butt and plopped him directly on the toilet. He got a sourpatch kid for using it. Once I gave up on all the things you\'re \\'supposed\' to do and just followed his lead we were fully trained in 3 days. It also helped that he had a new package of very exciting jurassic park underpants waiting for him.

2

euphlora

•

vor 2 Jahren

We made a clear Tupperware container full of random little treats and toys. Every time she went pee or tried we would reward her with something. Once she got the hang of going pee, we would only give her a reward for going poop. It really worked well for us. I think it took about 3 weeks total.

2

QueenGinger

•

vor 2 Jahren

We made a sticker chart and she got to put one on every time she went on the potty'

2 zarya2

•

vor 2 Jahren

Consistency, fight your brain, start it with a mindset that you are done with diapers, believe that there are billions of kids that did it, ofcs your kid can. It\'s really a lesson for you not for your child. You got it

2

Avatar von u/guitarlunn

guitarlunn

•

vor 2 Jahren

I didn't read the comments, but I will say this:

Everyone tries to rush it; obvious reasons that mostly benefit the parent. But my two boys we waited a bit longer until they were ready, closer to 4, and they essentially trained themselves because they had a much better understanding of the process resulting in confidence around it all. It made much less painless for everyone. We tried training early on to see if it would stick but hey we're stubborn as can be, so we practiced patience and they both just observed the way of the world around them and began picking it up themselves...

Don't feel pressured into milestones; you'll know when you have a real problem.

2 sandiasinpepitas

•

vor 2 Jahren

We're potty training our 2.5yo and she\'s still struggling with poo. We let her make the first push standing up and then we sit her down to finish. Sorry to be that graphic haha. We draw a smiley face on her hand every time she pees or poos.

2 viterous

•

vor 2 Jahren

No pants or diaper worked wonderfully. Didn't work at 2ish but he took it at 3+. Used portable potty. Prompt a bit and kept it stress free. Offer reward and praises. He got in accidents and we said we clean and stayed calm. Play outside if you have carpet. We moved onto just pants and let him have accidents. Reminded him a lot to pee in potty. Drink lots of water to practice. He picked it up in a day and we kept training for a week or two and now he will go on his own.

2

Avatar von u/_icedcooly

_icedcooly

•

vor 2 Jahren

Yup we followed a very similar technique as we were recommended \"Oh Crap! Potty Training\" from a friend of mine. His wife's whole office swore by it and it worked really well for both of our kids. Maybe I'm partial to the messaging from the book, but I think a lot of parents overcomplicate potty training or quit when it gets hard which just confuses kids.

3

TelmisartanGo0od

•

vor 2 Jahren

Toss a goldfish in and tell him to make it swim

2

Sanscreet

•

vor 2 Jahren

Does he go to daycare? They have a good routine for potty training at a lot of daycares these days for kids that are almost ready for preschool.

1 kbeck88

•

vor 2 Jahren

Consistency and a potty watch!

1

NessuH420

•

vor 2 Jahren

I went from taking my kid every 10 minutes and after eating or drinking every 5 minutes until he went to the restroom for 3 days then I bumped it to 15 minutes and 10 minutes after eating or drinking until he went potty then after 3 days I bumped it up to 30 minutes then eventually to an hour and by then he was a pro at going to the bathroom... every time he pottied or pooped in the toilet I would praise him with words... like awesome you went potty or great job you made it to the toilet... also I sang him made up songs that motivated him to go potty while he was on the toilet... he's 5 now and still asks me to sing him the toilet song lol

1

Avatar von u/SeaworthinessOdd4344
SeaworthinessOdd4344

•

vor 2 Jahren

We actually used a toilet that had one of her favorite tv shows on it.
She liked going to the toilet and then now she just does it. We got lucky but that toilet didn't hurt.

1

Avatar von u/mydad_left__ mydad_left_

•

vor 2 Jahren

My 2.5 yo will tell me when he pooped in his diaper so I know he understands what it is, and he enjoys and even asks to sit on the potty, he just won't use it. Could sit there all day and would only go when the pull up comes back on 1

Avatar von u/rubyhenry94
rubyhenry94

•

vor 2 Jahren

My son learned to pee really easily but refused to poop. He would ask for a diaper to poop and we didn't know what else to do besides give it to him. One day I was sick of it and just told him I didn't know what a diaper was but I had a potty chair. For some reason that clicked.

1

Muted-Recipe848

•

vor 2 Jahren

Take pampers off all day out them in undies and ask every 15 if they gotta pee or Just put them on the pot my baby girl was trained in a day my boy was trained in 2 weeks. I had alarms on my phone also 1 daboyzmalm

•

vor 2 Jahren

Does your kid's favorite character have potty training material? Our faves do (Daniel tiger, Elmo, others).

1

Amazing-Advice-3667

•

vor 2 Jahren

We did undies, he hated being naked. When he started to pee we yelled and ran to the bathroom. The first few times we were too late. But then he learned to stop the stream and finish on the toilet. We still changed undies all day long. Now he can hold it longer and we go somewhat consistently. (morning, before leaving the house, before watching tv, before taking a nap, etc.)

1

Wrong-Somewhere-5225

•

vor 2 Jahren

Made charts with first two kids, they caught on in a week! this one I just stopped using pull ups, when she has accidents we go "oh no let's go potty" she will stop and run to the bathroom 🚽 we're still a work in progress but this is huge after everything else we tried!!!

1

Avatar von u/Rocketbird

Rocketbird

•

vor 2 Jahren

Strictly followed the oh crap method for our kid under 2 and it worked great. Key is not to put too much pressure on him.

1

GemTaur15

•

vor 2 Jahren

Taking some notes here,my daughter turned two last month and we want to start potty training her but have no idea where to start

1

Avatar von u/tostaf

tostaf

•

vor 2 Jahren

We've been using this book for pooping, and our daughter now sings the song all the time, and is pooping in the potty pretty consistently.

Slip & Slide Potty Ride <https://a.co/d/09wllxhP>

It's been about 3 weeks since we did an immersive weekend.

1

Avatar von u/Eastern_Cartoonist22

Eastern_Cartoonist22

•

vor 2 Jahren

I got a potty seat that has steps and you put it on the regular toilet. From the moment I got that, my son has used it. The flushing and feeling like a big boy was a big deal for him. Then reward with candy/ popsicles according to #1 or #2

1 tinkykerplinky

•

vor 2 Jahren

Personally I\'d try putting the potty in the corner that he is currently using or making a toy barricade around the potty. It seems like he needs to be closed off and private ?

1 leeshakoi

•

vor 2 Jahren

The book oh crap potty training.

1 sgnarled

•

vor 2 Jahren

Get rid of all diapers. Not much of a choice then... worked for us but not sure if it could work for others.

1

Avatar von u/hazeleyes1119

hazeleyes1119

•

vor 2 Jahren

For us it was putting less pressure on it. We had the potty in a space where my daughter has easy access to it and talked about it all the time and eventually she showed interest. We also made a big deal clapping when she did use the potty and said thank you for using the potty. M&m also helped us and new underwear.

1

RopeTasty9619

•

vor 2 Jahren

We have a backyard and used it to allow him to run free without a diaper. It made him more aware of when he was actually going and not! If you have access to do something like this, I would recommend

1

MadGeographer

•

vor 2 Jahren

We tried everything. Believe it or not the Daniel Tiger Potty app helped bring everything together for my daughter. I don't think it's a particularly brilliant app but our daughter responded to it. My son didn't. You never know what strands and pieces kids synthesize to pull it all together to give it a good try. Good luck.

1

glittersurprise

•

vor 2 Jahren

The only thing that worked for us was a prize chest. We decorated and picked out toys together from the dollar store/thrift store. Immediate success because they wanted those toys and knew they had to poop on potty to get them.

1

Tubalcain422

•

vor 2 Jahren

Are you weird about the toilet? Will you let him come talk to you while you poop? Has he seen you make poop? Our kids learn from us. Toilet training is hard. I\'m sorry you\'re having a rough go of it.

1

Silush

•

vor 2 Jahren

We used the oh crap! Method which worked great! The most important part is consistency. And having laser focus for the first few days. If you don't fully believe your kid is ready, your kid will get that vibe from you and it will be so much harder. Read the book if you can, it really helped us a lot! Also, the book distinguishes between pee trained and poop trained and talks a whole lot about why kids find it scary to poop on the potty. Very interesting!

1

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 2 Jahren

My kiddo has been pooping consistently on the potty for more than six months, but pee is a totally different topic. We finally switched to cloth training diapers and it helped a ton because he finally felt wet. Note; we cloth diapered until we started potty training and it was too hard, so it wasn't a big transition for us but totally worth jt

1

Avatar von u/Individual-Dog-5891

Individual-Dog-5891

•

vor 2 Jahren

We got a potty watch and it was a \[extract_itex]15 absolute godsend. It has a timer for either 30/60/90 min, is in the shape of a little potty, and has a short song played when the timer goes off. Now, fair warning, this worked beautifully to get us over the initial hump of her going potty at home and she was so excited in the beginning...now she pretends not to have heard it and it's still a struggle to have her stop whatever she's doing, but it really did help to get her to start going potty at home.

1

Elevenyearstoomany

•

vor 2 Jahren

I laid it out for my oldest who wanted desperately to go to school. You have to be potty trained to go to school. They won't let you go if you're not. It's a rule. When he struggled pooping (naked method) I watched carefully for signs he had to go, put him on the toilet, and said we weren't leaving until he went. I sat with him and read books and sang songs and he played on his tablet until he relaxed enough to go. Every time after that it took less and less time for him to go.

1

Avatar von u/Late_Tour_4949

Late_Tour_4949

•

vor 2 Jahren

I don\'t know either we are struggling too. My daughter is over three and just does not care. I\'m currently in the bartering bribing stage again. Just keep trying.

1

Avatar von u/Additional_Set797

Additional_Set797

•

vor 2 Jahren

I'm sure this probably isn't the best method but it's working for us. My daughter has adhd and asd but she's high functioning getting her to sit for any length of time is a challenge, except when she has the iPad. We just started letting her watch it on the potty when she needed to be changed, gradually increasing the time she sat, if she went cool if not ok. Now she's been waking up dry and I'll put her on the potty first thing without the iPad and say go potty and she will pee right away. After that it's hit or miss during the day but she will sit and watch her videos and isn't afraid of the potty. In two weeks we are loosing the pull ups and hoping for the best! Also she's almost 4 she wasn't ready when we tried at 3.

1

sonyaellenmann

•

vor 2 Jahren

Bribery?

1

Avatar von u/-burgers

-burgers

•

vor 2 Jahren

I second bribery. That buzz light-year monster truck to poop on the potty forever was the best purchase of my life.

4

DifficultSpill

•

vor 2 Jahren

It can still be age. Some kids aren't ready until mid 3, late 3 or even early 4.

I believe in waiting, and not talking about it while I wait, because they can feel pressure from you really easily. When you say "Jump" a toddler says "No way," and in this context that can really cause problems, as you've seen!

I hate those preschool deadlines. But pushing probably won't help anyways. I would wait and let him wear diapers and not talk about the potty, then a couple weeks before school starts, gently explain their rule. By the way, some kids continue to wear diapers at home at first even while they use the toilet at school. It's not confusing to them. It's part of unwinding at home.

Oh dang you only have a month? Well, still. I'd tell him that you're trying something new, you didn't like how the old way was working, and now you're just going to put him in diapers and not try to make him use the potty. Then a little later, if he doesn't already know, casually mention the school thing.

0

Happy_Flow826

•

vor 2 Jahren

Have him help clean up accidents, they get pretty disgusted by it and want to do whatever is easier, which should then be hyped up as sitting on the toilet and going in there. If you pee/poo your pants, you have to help clean it up. If you go in the toilet it's just a simple butt wipe from mom, no messy or nasty poo/pee

0

Avatar von u/Blue_Mandala\

Blue_Mandala\

•

vor 2 Jahren

We gave a choice, pee pee in the tub or pee pee in the potty. But he had to choose one, we knew he had to pee, and he would give in and go after only a little pushback. He used to pee standing up in the tub, but eventually started choosing to sit on the potty like mommy, or standing pee pee in Dad's potty. (With me he chooses to sit, with dad he stands at the big potty and dad helps to aim)

So our problem is that he does the same with poops, but still does poops squatting in the tub. Idk how to get him to go in the potty for that.

Luckily it\'s only once a day before we leave the house.

0

Avatar von u/ednasmom ednasmom

•

vor 2 Jahren

The advice with the diaper off trick is once you decide to take it off... it doesn't go back on. With the exception of sleeping. I was a preschool teacher and most of the time, the least amount of pressure possible was what was best. Every now and then the director of the school suggested an M&M for pee and 2 M&Ms for poop, if your kid is driven that way.

Jamie Glowacki is a good potty training resource and the podcast The Mom Room has an episode or two about it. The host's husband is a urologist so she has some interesting insight.

0

Avatar von u/Naive-Engineering573
Naive-Engineering573

•

vor 10 Monaten

Have you tried monday undrware? They're reusable underwear for potty training, helped encourage my kid to use the toilet by wearing underwear like daddy.

0

\[gelöscht\]

•

vor 10 Monaten

I\'m struggling with my 4 year old. He has refused and fought and cries like he was hurt EVERY time I take him to use the potty. His favorite character right now is Chase from Paw Patrol and we have those pullups with Chase on it. I told him that Chase (on the pullup) doesn\'t like to get peed or pooped on. It worked for a day. Told him the same thing the next day, and he picks the Rubble pullup. (SMH) He says, \"I can poop on Rubble.\" since it\'s not Chase. I told him that Rubble doesn\'t like it either, it worked for half a day. I have given treats, I have begged this child to use the potty but he refuses. I feel bad because he tells me he\'s scared of it (sensitive ears to flushing sounds). It doesn\'t help that my ex told him there was a drain monster in the pipes. I\'ve tried the portable training potties but its never worked. I would try the \'no undies\' approach but he has a twin sister and an older brother that doesn\'t need to see him without something on. Potty training the other two was so simple and quick because they both learning in under 6 months. Trying and doing with him has been over a year and a half.

(Always started around 2.5 yrs)